Who promotes the bond issue? "The man who wishes to create a market for bonds" is Mr. Davis' answer. "Bond issues are carried by bond satellites and a small minority creates a big indebtedness for the large majority."

Who buys bonds. "The fellow with the surplus money."

"The public doesn't understand taxation," Mr. Davis continued. "Today the people are fooled into thinking they are getting a lower tax rate but at the same instant their property is being reappraised and a higher value is placed on it. This brings about the same amount of taxes as does the higher rate."

Preceeding the talk by Mr. Davis, councilman John H. Lewis addressed the meeting and urged the Hilltop people to follow their present plan in insisting on the desired sewer relief and he expressed himself as believing they would get results eventually.

Marsh C. Green also read a report concerning the sewer program. Another meeting is planned for this week or next and thereafter until after elections.

WEST WINS FIRST GAME

Expected to Beat South In Coming Game on Saturday at South Field.

West High school's football warriors started the year with a victory Saturday afternoon when they defeated Springfield by a score of 2-0 on the Springfield grounds.

The game was lacking in thrills and spectacular plays from either side. The exceeding heat detracted much from the whole event. A 30 yard dash by Adair gave West the best run of the game.

The scoring came in the second quarter when McCracken blocked a punt and fell on the ball for a safety.

West meets South this Saturday at South field at 2:30 p. m. The prospects for holding up their winning in this Saturday's game are good. As yet no regular captain has been elected but it is expected that the team will have a captain by the following game.

All of the old members of the team are showing up in good fashion. Wood, Walker, Everett, Trabue, and Blumer are all playing a good game. Adair, a sophomore is probably the best new material brought to the school this year.

What effect does an inadequate sewer system have on our homes and property?

Why the home owners and wage earners should not vote for more bond issues.

Why is it necessary to ask tax payers to vote a bond issue to pay city employes a living wage.

How do the employes drawing their salaries from public funds expect to have their salaries raised or maintain their present standard by the issuance of more bonds.

These questions will be answered Monday night, and all residents interested in these questions are urged to attend the meeting.

BUSINESS MEN HEAR TALKS

F. Miller, Capt. Williams, Lieut. McKee and Kline Roberts Address Association.

The meeting of the Hilltop Business Men's association, at the Matsonia Tuesday evening, developed into one of the most spirited and peppiest meetings held by the association for several months.

After disposing of the routine association business, the members listened to several speakers in the interests of the community fund, the Franklin County Pioneer association and the Columbus air port proposition.

Fred A. Miller, chairman of the Community Fund, addressed the members on what he termed the biggest thing in Columbus today, and in his talk illustrated the developments of a community such as Columbus was years ago, up to the present day, when the community fund has become a necessity Mr. Miller eliminated the question of money in his talk and pleaded for co-operation not only one week in the year when the raising of money is a necessity, but asked the men to think community fund 365 days in the year.

Representatives of the Franklin County Pioneer association explained that the association is desirous of placing a tablet at the corner of Sandusky and West Broad street, marking the spot where Lucas Sullivant erected the first brick house in Columbus. They explained that the house is still standing, although over 100 years old, and is located inside the convent walls at Sandusky and West Broad street. The dining room and kitchen of the original house still remain as they were when Mr. Sullivant erected the house.

Captain Williams of the Columbus Aero club addressed the meeting on the aims of the aero club and explained its operations.

Lieutenant McKee of the Norton field and Kline Roberts of the Columbus air port board told members of the needs of an air port for Columbus if the city expected to move forward with other communities of the country.

GAS STATION IS HELD UP

Lone Man Takes $17 From Station at Burgess Avenue and West Broad Street.

Seventeen dollars in cash was taken from the cash drawer of the Standard Oil Co. station at Burgess avenue and Broad street last Saturday night about 9 o'clock when a lone gunman entered and demanded that Ralph Lombard, the attendant, hand over the cash.

The man, appearing to be about five and one-half feet tall and very dark skinned entered the station walking and with his gun in his hand. He asked how much money the attendant had and demanded that he open the drawer. He took the money from the drawer and proceeded to search Lombard. He overlooked $10 in Lombard's watch pocket.

Lombard said he put his hands up when the man held the gun on him thinking it would attract a policeman who was standing on the street a short distance away. At this point the gunman jabbed the gun into Lombard's side and told him to lower his hands. After taking the money the man disappeared up an alley nearby.

Lombard lives at 115 Midland Ave.

BRINGING NEW YORK TO COLUMBUS

Almost the Same Day That a New Style in Men's Apparel Makes Its Appearance on Broadway in New York, The Connor Company Is Offering It to the Well-Dressed Men of This City.

(C) By JACK PHILLIPS

A clothier's mere desire to serve his patrons well means nothing unless he has a first-class stock to back up his good itentions. A man who has been disappointed in not being able to secure some clothing or toggery needed, probably suffered more from the smallness of stock and lack of good judgment on the clothier's part than from any ill intention. However, this does not remedy matters so far as the patron is concerned. The Connor Company not only has a keen desire to serve its customers' best interests, but backs up that desire with one of the largest and finest stocks of men's clothing and furnishing in the city. It includes all the essentials that contribute to the wardrobe of the well-dressed man, and in a wide variety. Here your choice is not confined to several styles, but on the contrary, the latitude from which you have to select is very broad. It includes scores of anything you may demand in the way of men's apparel whether it be a tie, a hat, or a fine suit of clothes.

The Connor Company is considered by the best dressers as an authority on men's wear, and the reason for this is immediately apparent to anyone on visiting their stores. They are permeated with an atmosphere of style—a characteristic which not only covers the more elaborate merchandise or garment, but reaches even to the most inexpensive lines sold. Indeed, it is an atmosphere of style correctness in every thing in which style is concerned. And style of necessity is linked to quality. Men who realize that a good address goes a long way in aiding a man to forge to the front are turning more and more every day to this company for their clothing needs. They know that its stocks invariably reflect the correct mode in men's apparel down to the smallest detail. And it's details of a man's attire that gives character and tone to his dress.

Individuality both in stock and service is the keynote of the substantial progress of this progressive concern, and no doubt this is why its patronage includes so many women. They know that here they can always secure articles of dress for their men folk that will please them. They also know that it will not only look good, but that time will prove it is good. And, after all, time is the best test of quality.

Having one store at the corner of Rich and High street and the other in the Majestic Theatre building—both right in the center of good shopping districts, and easily accessible to shoppers from everywhere, it naturally follows that much of this firm's trade is from people who not only know what is correct, but demand it. That their requirements are met satisfactorily by the Connor Company is proved by the large business it transacts of this character. In fact, "those in the know" often say that the new styles are shown by its stores almost the same day that they make their appearance at the leading fashion centers.

To enumerate the many famous brands carried by this firm would require considerable space. However, in mentioning Society Brand clothes, Knapp-Felt hats, Interwoven hose, Vassar underwear, Eagle shirts and Daniel Hayes gloves, it can be readily seen that each department features a label supreme in its field and known the country over.

Without question the Connor Company is one of the most up-to-date retail concerns in Columbus. Its stores are elegantly furnished and equipped with the most modern fixtures obtainable. This all shows the progressiveness of the owners, who by constantly striving to give the public something a little bit better all the time have not alone succeeded to a marked degree, but placed their stores high on the list of this city's busiest trade centers.

The Sandman Story

By Martha Martin

THE DOG'S STORY

"Bow-wow, bow-wow, bow-wow, bow-wow, bow-wow, bow-wow," said Bruce the dog.

"Bow-wow, bow-wow, bow-wow, bow-wow, bow-wow, bow-wow," answered Buster, who was Bruce's best dog friend.

"I've something quite funny to tell you," said Bruce.

"I'm anxious to hear it," said Buster, and he wagged his tail to show that he meant it indeed.

"Didn't you have something to tell me, Buster?" Bruce asked. "Do tell that to me first of all."

"Very well," said Buster, "I will."

"I was going to tell you," he went on, "about the city trip I made. You know I visited in the city?"

"I should say I did know it," said Bruce. "I was very lonely. I know how lonely I was. I missed you dreadfully, Buster."

"And I missed you, too, Bruce. You've no idea of how much I missed you."

And both dogs meant what they said for they were very, very great friends.

"Well, the children went to a big school in a very crowded part of the city.

"One day I got lost. But you know I couldn't help it. The city was very confusing and puzzling to me.

"And in that nice big school they announced in the assembly where all the children appeared at the first of the morning that I had been lost.

"And they described the kind of a dog I was and all about me and about the collar I wore for those who did not happen to know me.

"Of course I had made many, many friends but I didn't know all the children. You can't know them all in a city school, Bruce.

Doesn't that seem strange?"

"That seems very strange," said Bruce. "I don't know that I would like that.

"Now, do you know, I was just going to ask you if you were found," Bruce grinned.

"That would have been as foolish a question as there could have been. Quite as foolish a question as there could ever be," Bruce added.

"Of course you were found but tell me about it."

"Well, as I say, they announced that I was lost. That noon when there was recess many of the boys and girls went in different directions all over the neighborhood thinking I might have lost my way not far from school but far enough so as to be puzzled.

"But I found my own way back! Yes, I had gone a longer distance than I had meant to and then had become very much puzzled.

"But I found my own way back! thankful to say, and I'm always happy to think how many fine boys and dear girls went looking for me.

"It showed we had so many friends! And I love friends.

"That very afternoon it snowed," Buster continued, "and the snowballs that those children made—they were great. I used to think they didn't care for snow much in the city and that city children couldn't appreciate snowballs, but they can, Bruce, oh yes, they can!

"But here I am talking away the time and I want to hear your story."

"Oh," said Bruce, "a friend of my master wanted to take my picture and the friend said:

"'Now look pleasant!'

"So I looked 'pleasant' and wagged my tail to show how very pleasant I could be when having my picture taken.

"Well, it seems they didn't want me to look pleasant and kep one's tail when my tailed moved it spoilt the picture. Dear me, the idea of telling a dog to look pleasant and expecting him to keep his tail still! That is about the funiest thing I ever heard of, Buster."

"I think it is the very funniest thing I ever heard of," said Buster. 'It is perfectly ridiculous."

"And I loved your story, too, Buster, for I think it seems fine to think of a school that thinks of the dogs as well as the children of the neighborhood."

But both dogs began to laugh again, for the thought of being told about the funiest thing I ever heard still was quite the funniest thing dogs could hear.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By M. IRVING KING

ASHES AND LIVE COALS

In some parts of the country there is a superstition to the effect that a maiden can ascertain the name of her future husband by the following means: When she goes to bed she should hang her undergarment upon the foot of the couch and place below it a board covered with ashes, saying:

Whoever my true love be,
Come write his name in these ashes for me.

The next morning the required name will appear upon the ash-covered board. Something of the same sort is recommended for those who fancy themselves in ill luck because of some sinister magical influence at work against them—such as being bewitched, or "overlooked," as they say. In this latter case no board or ashes should be used but a live coal dropped through the garment after it is taken off. The selection of a garment which has been worn next the body is because it has, according to the idea of primitive man, acquired by the magic of contact a share in the personality of the wearer so that it represents its owner in a very real way—is, in fact, a sort of second self. Therefore what affects it affects its owner. The ashes and the live coal are both relics of fire worship.

The second superstition mentioned is a common one in some rural sections and Elworthy says of it "that the burning coal may be a relic of fire-worship and so, on the other hand, a propitiatory act of sun worship." But fire-worship would appear to be the simpler explanation.

Plaited Metal Cloth Skirt Accents Trend to Elegance

Resplendent dress is undoubtedly forespoken for autumn and the coming winter. The tendency toward greater elegance is evidenced throughout the new showings. This elaboration of the mode extends to daytime as well as evening theme.

The impressive note in every collection of advance styles is the opulence of the fabrics employed in their making. Such velvets! So sheer one can "draw them through a ring," so indescribably lustrous, so colorful—the new chestnut and leaf browns are especially effective.

Competing with these alluring velvets are sumptuous metal weaves of every sort. The glint and glitter of gold and silver pervades the entire fabric realm from sports woolens and knitted to silks and satins and velvet.

Skirts made of supple metal cloth which has been finely plaited, are among autumn's thrilling new modes. They are for daytime wear, too—bridge parties, afternoon teas and such. This gorgeous item is shown in the picture posed by dainty Mary Philbin, who won her chance and made good in Hollywood in a beauty contest some very few years ago. Posed over this skirt is a blouse of black crepe with rows of metal braid as shown. This costume is typical of the new modes for formal daytime wear.

Other fetching styles include transparent velvets with an applique of gold motifs. Sometimes the lustrous velvet or satin (satin is as prominent as velvet) dresses have no trimming save a metal girdle or belt lavish in detail and with, perhaps, a conspicuous buckle.

Varying the style of the metal skirt with the fabric blouse is that of the finely plaited transparent velvet skirt (preferably black) with a metal novelty blouse. This blouse may be of metal cloth entire or of a silk and metal weave. The element of color enters into the metal blouse in entrancing tones and tints which are artfully worked into the very weave. For instance if one have a deep wine-colored velvet skirt, bronzed wine color will also characterize the metal fabric blouse.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

Housekeeping moves in a circular track
Of cooking and dusting and sweeping, I find—
Like the snail who must carry his house on his back,
The housekeeper carries her house on her mind.

THE NUTRITIOUS SOUP

The primary purpose of soup is to stimulate the stomach and prepare it for the heavier food which will follow. All soups, if hot, are stimulating, but not all soups are nourishing.

Soups which consist of meat extractives, water and seasoning, are purely stimulating. They are invaluable because they stimulate a jaded appetite and warm the stomach.

A cream soup, however, is a meal in itself; with bread it will make a good, substantial meal. Such soups should be served when the rest of the meal is to be light. They are good for the heavy worker, the active children and those who cannot digest heavier meats; so the creamed soup is an all-'round good food for every member of the family.

All vegetables combine best with milk in cream soups if cooked, mash and added hot. After cooling they are harder to blend.

A potato soup can be so very good and it can be so very poor that they would never pass for relations.

Cream of Potato Soup.

Adding an onion and a few celery tops to the potatoes while cooking will give a better flavor than to have them added to the milk. Peel six potatoes and cook with a small onion and a few celery leaves in salted water. When the potatoes are soft, put them through a sieve or ricer. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add two of flour and cook until well blended; add a half cupful of the potatoe water and the potato; when boiling hot add a pint of top milk, or thin cream will make a richer soup. Cook in a double boiler for half an hour. Add a tablespoonful of butter bit by bit and serve at once.

Mixed Vegetable Soup.

Take one quart each of good beef stock, one quart of water and one cupful each of chopped onion, carrot and celery, one-half cupful of turnip, a sprig of parsley, a half cupful of cabbage. Parboil the cabbage, turnip and onions five minutes, then drain. Fry the onion and carrot in a tablespoonful of butter, then add the hot stock and water and one cupful of strained tomato and cook with a teaspoonful each of sugar, salt and pepper. Serve without straining.

"Ronny, I'd be very happy with Nancy as my daughter," she changed the subject.

"The substance rather than the mirage. But I don't love her, mother. I know that. But is the other a mirage? Nancy says not. What a muddle! My chuck it. There are too many other new book—I'm afraid I'll have to things buzzing about in my head. Here comes Mignon. Dinner's ready."

In a great manor on Polygon hill, Betty sat curled upon a broad window seat, watching the receding gold and scarlet of the September sunset. That is, she seemed to be watching it. In reality, she was just recovering from a stunning, paralyzing mental blow. The door to the Apocalypse had opened slightly. On her knees lay a crumbled newspaper. She found it on the floor of the limousine, where some sardonic jester had tossed it.

"My father! They lie, they lie!"

Down below, in the study, a local banker eyed the end of his cigar through half-closed lids. Mansfield, his fingers pyramided watched him expectantly.

"Do you want some unsolicited advice?" asked the banker, finally.

"Go ahead with it," said Mansfield, smiling tolerantly.

"Clean up these grogshops, which you really own. Tear down your rotten firetraps. Give the reform candidate the city hall to play with for two years."

Mansfield laughed.

"Dunleigh," continued the banker, "the people are thinking. They are finding the true cleavage between right and wrong. I warn you, they are going to do away with this political game as you and I know it. This fellow Cathewe is no ordinary disturber. I defy you to find a libel in his editorial comments. That boy goes down among men. He hasn't accused you of doing anything criminal, as understood by law. He attacks you from the moral side. Mark me, he'll soon be after your new multitone plant. The temporary hospital you have erected is too near the tanks. An explosion would knock it to flinders."

"Let the city fire department advise me about that," answered Mansfield, shrugging his shoulders.

"They are afraid of you, and you know it. If anything does happen out there—for lack of water—it will be criminal negligence; and this fellow Cathewe will hang your hide on his wall."

"Well, how much has he borrowed to keep his cituperous rag going?"

"Nothing."

"How has he kept going on, then?"

"I'll come to that in a moment. There are but seven stockholders in all. They have promised never to dispose of their interests to you."

"But I don't want the rag. All I need is to have him lose his following."

"And he isn't losing it. The paper's circulation is growing daily, despite the fact that you struck off his local advertising. Something really vital is going on. The poor are beginning to boycott the shops that have withdrawn their advertising at your command. Soon the advertisers will drift back, of necessity."

Mansfield frowned.

"Dunleigh, there's a mystery I can't get to the bottom of. There are four banks in Bannister. Being president of one of them and a stockholder in all of them, I am in a position to find out things. This young fellow Cathewe has an active account in each bank, and it is evident that he is paying the losses out of his packet. Once a month he replenishes these withdrawals."

"Drafts on New York?"

"Cash. Nothing traceable."

"How much is his active account in each bank?"

"One hundred thousand dollars, cash!"

"Nearly half a million?" gasped Mansfield, with a chill feeling in his throat.

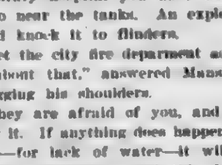
"Yes," continued the banker. "Four hundred thousand will keep his paper going without advertisements for ten years. Another queer thing. I don't know about the other banks, but at mine he has two accounts, one general and one special. The general account is never more than two or three thousand. The special account is never drawn against except to pay the paper's pay-checks and expenses. Four hundred thousand, behind a newspaper like the Herald, has a tremendous power. My advice is to get your political and financial house in order."

A droll idea entered Mansfield's head. He was not without humor. So he returned to his desk, looked into the telephone book, and called a number. A woman's voice answered.

"I wish to speak with Mr. Cathewe."

"Just a moment, please."

Three or four minutes passed.



"Hello! This is Mr. Cathewe. What do you wish to speak to me about?"

THE OLD APOTHECARY SHOP AND THE MODERN DRUG STORE

The Stapf Drug Company Furnishes a Fine Illustration of the Development Which the Passing Years Have Brought In the Drug Business.

It was to the old apothecary shop with its characteristic mortar and pestle as an insignia that our forefathers looked for the alleviation of all their ills. Still retaining this feature of its service to the community there has now come the modern drug store that renders a service far past this limited field. In fact, so much so, that the advice, "Try the drug store first" has become one of the most popular of all the national slogans. Illustrating the development which the passing years have brought in the drug business it would be difficult to find a better example than the Stapf Drug company, located in the Neil House block.

One is almost safe in making the positive assertion that this is one of the most up-to-date and completely equipped drug stores to be found in any city of the size of Columbus, and one wherein the patron can ask for anything in the drug line and get it. Not only this, but it will be a quality product and at the right price. So it is not surprising that the suggestion, "Let's go to Stapf's" is heard with increasing frequency. The visitor, who goes to this store for the first time, soon learns the answer to its popularity.

A uniform spirit of courteous service pervades the place, and every employe seems to know that, after all, it is the public which pays the salaries and overhead of every mercantile establishment in the land, and consequently, it is the public that must be served. In a dim and vague way, of course, every retailer knows this, but in Stapf's it is immediatley and constantly apparent.

In building up the business to its present position of leadership and adding to its lines from time to time Mr. H. A. Stapf, the proprietor, has never lost sight of the fact that the primary purpose of a drug store is the accurate and careful dispensing of drugs and medicines. This idea is reflected in the store's immense stock of popular and time-tried remedies, and especially in its prescription department where row upon row of shelves are filled with drugs of every conceivable nature, and where every possible safeguard has been placed around their compounding—not the least of which being that registered pharmacists of wide experience compound each and every prescription. Errors are practically impossible. Thus it is easy to see why a patient is so often given a prescription with the suggestion, "better have this filled at Stapf's." It is this firms reputation for purity and reliability that has brought about this expression of confidence and made its prescription business one of the largest in the city.

Not only in the medicinal field, but in other lines the Stapf Drug company is recognized as a leader. This is particularly true of its soda grill, which is one of the most popular places in the city, in addition to being the rendezvous for many out-of-town people when in Columbus. The trade in this department, like the others of the store, is well established.

It is not difficult to understand why the Stapf Drug company has grown so rapidly, and it would be difficult indeed to find anyone in the entire city who does not believe a still greater period of expansion lies before it.

This 36-piece wash (one tub full) was done in 15 minutes in the Edenette—current cost ½¢.

The Washer You Have Waited For 10 Days Free Trial

AMAZINGLY compact, efficient, fully guaranteed—thousands in use. A perfect wash turned out in 15 minutes right on your kitchen table, or wherever convenient, without any fuss, bother or slopping of suds. Think of it! You can own an Edenette for less than ⅓ the cost of the ordinary, cumbersome washer.

Simply pour hot water and soap flakes in the Edenette tub, place on the top containing the universal motor driven vacuum cup, plug the extension cord into any light socket, and in 15 minutes the clothing will be beautifully washed. Handles everything from heavy overalls to the daintiest lingerie and silks.

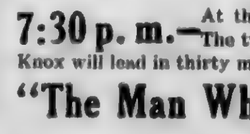
Easily carried—weighs less than 20 pounds. Top when inverted, fits into Edenette tub, as shown above; store it under the kitchen table, sink or in the closet.

Read What This User Says:

"Before I owned an Edenette, I allowed my soiled lingerie and dainty things to accumulate. Now I toss them each day into the Edenette, add hot water and soap flakes and let the Edenette do the work in a few minutes. I have washed two full size sheets at one time. If I could not buy another I would not sell my own for many times its small cost."

Mrs. M. R.—
New York City.

Free Trial in Your Home



The Edenette is a perfect washer. It must be seen and used to be appreciated. We want you to actually use it in your home. There is no obligation to buy. Write for Free Demonstration or call and see the Edenette in use.

Seiller's store began business on the Hilltop, nineteen years ago, in the present location of the Economy Variety store. In 1912 he moved his business into the new building where he is at present located. The growth of the business since that time has been such that additions have also been made here.

The store was organized in a small way and through the constant endeavors of Mr. Seiller has today grown to be the largest shopping center of its kind west of High street. Mr. Seiller was one of the many far sighted business men who have had a part in making the Hilltop the fine community it is today.

MUCH ACTIVITY AT HIGHLAND

Japanese Pictures on Display—Excellent Work in Block Printing.

MARGUERITE KILPATRICK

An interesting group of Japanese pictures by Mary Eleanor Price are on exhibition in the art room, and have attracted much favorable comment. Miss Price is a very talented pupil. In addition to her art work she also plays first violin in the school orchestra.

Excellent work is being done in the block printing department of the art school. Some handsome scarfs, cushions, table covers, and draperies have been blocked and through this phase of the art department, many homes are being beautified, and a serious appreciation of art and its possibilities is growing among the students.

The orchestra is now fairly under way and rehearsals are progressing nicely. Twenty-five members are now enrolled and some beautiful new music is being prepared for future public performances.

At a meeting of the Girls' Glee club last Thursday, officers were elected as follows: president, Mary Allison, secretary and treasurer, Lucille Miller and librarian, Jane Markeson.

The troop of Boy Scouts at Highland Junior High school will take an all-day trip next Sunday near Sugar Grove, accompanied by the scoutmaster, Mr. Elliott, assistant scoutmaster, Mr. Williams, and the parents of the boys who wish to go.

The scouts are again to usher at the stadium Saturday.

The Tutshi Camp Fire met Monday evening after school. They took their kits and hiked north along the river. For initiation the new assistant guardian, Miss Cotner, had to build the fire and have a group song ready for the next meeting.

The Shi-we-si Camp Fire group went for a hike Wednesday after school to Westgate park. The committee in charge consisted of Inez Buscher, Myrtle Swaney, Myrtle Walters, Doris Shirley.

Fireman Burned

Lieutenant Ike Kidd, 40, of 38 North Warren Ave., received burns about the face while on duty fighting flames at the fire in the harness shop of J. M. Brand & Sons, 144 E. Main St. The fire occurred early Sunday morning.

Kidd was taken to Grant hospital where his injuries were treated.

NEW BOOKS AT LIBRARY

Circulation Drops Off During September, But Due for Rise in October.

Several new books have been received by the Holmes Hilltop library and are now ready for distribution.

A report from Mrs. Nannie Currier, librarian, shows a decrease in the number of books taken out last month. The average number taken out each day in September was 124. Mrs. Currier says the number will increase from now on due to the use of the library by the school children. At present there are a great number of reference books being used by the students, and less fiction is being read.

The first re-registration of the library since it was founded four years ago was started in June and is nearly completed now. Mrs. Currier states that to date she has about 1100 registered.

The following new books are ready for circulation.

Juliet is Twenty—Abbot.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

LOVE AND DAISIES

Probably most people have, at some period of their lives—when they were young and not so foolish as they are now—plucked a daisy and, thinking of one of the opposite sex, picked the petals of the flower one by one, saying at the same time "He loves me; he loves me not." If the last petal picked coincides with "he loves me" all is well. If with "he loves me not" all is wrong.

There are several modifications of this superstition of daisy picking, but this is the most common one, and it is very wide spread. Empires have risen and vanished away, civilizations have flourished and decayed to be succeeded by new ones, since boy and girl first sought to know the hearts of their loved ones by plucking the petals of the daisy and still the practice goes on. The very name of the flower chosen for this incantation is significant of the origin of the superstition—day's eye, Anglo-Saxon daegeseage—that is the sun, and looking at the daisy the reason of its being so named is apparent. Now, Freyja, the goddess of love in the old Scandinavian mythologies and whose cult spread over northern Germany had, according to some of the legends, her home in the sun; and she thus became associated in the minds of her worshipers with the daisy—the flower-sun. Therefore, it was most fitting to consult the daisy upon matters of love.

The altars of Freyja have long crumbled to dust; but young men and maidens still consult her symbolic flower to learn the hearts of their loved ones, believing, in the words of the popular song, that "Every daisy in the dell knows the secret, knows it well."

The Sandman Story

By Martha Martin

ABOUT OWLS

"I've promised to tell you something of owls this evening," said the Sandman, "and I think perhaps I'll choose the Great-Horned Owl and the Barn Owl as the ones to talk about.

"The Great Horned Owl is the first bird of the year when it comes to nesting, but I don't know that I can say very much else for him.

"He is a very cruel creature—going after rabbits and other small animals.

"Oh yes, he hunts and frightens little animals almost out of their wits and eats them. He hunts at night and oh, how afraid the little rabbits are of him.

"He Is Very Cruel, Going After Small Animals."

"Old Horned-Owl, as they call him, is their enemy and their little hearts beat with fear if they think he is anywhere around.

"How many of their little hearts he has stopped beating altogether!

"He doesn't even mind Mr. Skunk and his family and he thinks it's a fine sight to see a mother Skunk walking along at night, followed by her small children, each walking one by one as though engaged in a drill.

"The Skunk family sleeps during the very coldest part of the winter, but the rest of the time they are awake, which rejoices old Horned-Owl's heart—if he can be said to have a heart.

"The poor Skunk family would like to be sociable, but no one wants to be sociable with them except old Horned-Owl, and they do not care for his kind of sociability!

"Old Horned-Owl has tufts upon his ears so that he can be told from other owls, and then he is very big and very strong.

"He gives a terrible shriek and a mournful call and the little animals tremble.

"He doesn't bother about building himself a home, but he tries to find a nest that has been vacant and has out a birds' 'To Let' sign.

"That sign in the bird world is simply an empty nest.

"And when a nest is 'To Let' or 'For Rent,' no one need do anything but move in—if it is a suitable place.

"Now the Barn Owl is quite different. The Barn Owl is far more gentle-looking in appearance, for Old Horned-Owl is a dangerous-looking creature, too!

"He has soft feathers of gray and brown and yellowish white, with speckled decorations.

"He hasn't any tufts over his ears such as the Great-Horned Owl has.

"He has little brown eyes and long legs, and he likes to have his nest in the hollow of a tree as sometimes the Great-Horned Owl does, too, or under a roof of a barn.

"Mrs. Barn Owl lays six beautiful white eggs in the nest and she thinks no other eggs would do!

"The Barn Owl is one of the latest of the Owls to nest and in many, many ways is very different from the Great-Horned Owl.

"The Barn Owl is rather shy and isn't often seen, but they do a great deal of good work, destroying bad insects and brown rats that would do a great deal of harm.

"Yes, I cannot say that I have very much that is good to say about Old Horned-Owl, but I have a great deal that is good to say about the useful Barn Owl and so I told about Horned-Owl first and Barn Owl last, saving the better owl for the last!

"That is the way it should be when one is telling about these two Owl families."

Members of the fish patrol of the California coast go out in high-powered motor boats to catch men who disobey the game laws in those waters. There are poachers who use nets with meshes smaller than the law allows; some who catch in seines fish which should be caught only on lines; fishers and duck hunters out of season; and even actual pirates, who attack fisherman to rob them of their catch. The men on the fish patrol are said to know "every foot of the more than four hundred miles of coast line of San Francisco Bay, and are familiar with the sea for fifty miles outside the Golden Gate," says Popular Mechanics. "By night, the patrol boats move through the sloughs and tributary bays, and around the mouths of streams emptying into the bay. All their lights are out, and they seem to 'feel' their way, never going on the banks, or meeting with accident. The patrolmen watch for the reflection of the lights on the boats of the poachers, or the sounds of their motors, and, with muffled engines, try to creep upon the law violators, and to take them at work."

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"BREAKING FROM COVER"

When some one who is being pursued ducks or hides it is said that he is running to cover. When at a seemingly opportune moment he leaves his shelter to make another dash he is "breaking from cover."

The slightly varied phrase comes to us from the parlance of the hunt, where "cover" is synonymous with "covert," to describe a thicket which affords protection for hunted game. The aptness of the term brought it into the figurative use in common speech with which we are familiar. It may not be a fox that is hunted, and projecting woods may give place to a vestibule or a doorway in the boys' game of "hide and seek." But the one who gives up his shelter to dash to another vantage point is said to be "breaking from cover."

"A commonplace life, we say and sigh.
Yet why do we call so we say?
The commonplace sun in the commonplace sky
Makes up the commonplace day.
The moon and the stars are commonplace things;
The flower that blooms and the bird that sings;
But and were the world and dark the lot.
If the flower failed and the sun shone not.
And God, who sees each separate soul,
Out of commonplace lives makes a beautiful whole."

THE DINNER

For the beginning of a dinner there is nothing quite so refreshing as a fruit cocktail. With fresh citrus fruits as well as the luscious melons, one need never fear monotony.

Cantaloupe Cocktail

Cut the edible centers of muskmelon with a small potato scoop into balls. If the fruit and glasses are both chilled, the fruit is much more appetizing. Pour over a sauce which has been made and chilled as follows: Take the juice of a lemon, a quarter of a cupful of water and half a cupful of sugar; boil for ten minutes until a heavy syrup is made. Chill, add a tablespoonful of canton ginger finely minced and a tablespoonful or two of the syrup.

Lemon sauce with a sprig of mint or a mint sauce strained and a little lemon syrup added with a fresh sprig of mint to top the fruit, is especially good with muskmelon. Watermelon is so pretty served this way with an orange sauce.

Chicken with Asparagus

Cut up a fat chicken and stew until tender, saving the broth. Cook a bunch or two of asparagus or use the canned; cook noodles in the chicken broth, with some of the asparagus water. Have all hot, put a layer of noodles on a serving table, over this a layer of buttered asparagus and on top, the chicken, which has been well seasoned and all bones removed. Celery is especially good with this dish in place of asparagus. Cook it in the chicken broth until tender before cooking the noodles. Keep all the ingredients hot in a double boiler until ready to serve. One good-sized chicken with three or four bunches of celery will serve quite a large company. The noodles and celery are so well seasoned with the chicken that a small portion of the latter is all that is needed.

Hats Stress Rivalry Between Tiara Flares and Ripple Brims

When is a brim not a brim? Many a stylish felt shape gives clew to the answer by flaunting a graceful tiara flare athwart its snug-fitting crown, which a closeup view reveals as nothing more or less than the brim "that was." This game of hide-and-seek which fashionable hats are playing with thier brims, presenting them in the guise of flares and flanges on the crown, accounts for a very flattering new silhouette which is at this moment prominent in the mode.

These new hats which transform brims into crown flares are proving a boon to women who cannot becomingly wear the simple unadorned now-so-modish skull types which hide ears and eyebrows and which so conscientiously follow the line of the hair at the nap of the neck.

In the instance of the little black felt hat centered in this illustration the milliner deliberately snips off the narrow brim, elevating it to a position of prominence in the form of a flare bridging the crown from ear to ear.

A flare which displays a change of location for the ripple brim, the designer having cut it away from the headline, positioning it across the top crown, gives super-chic to the model shown at the top to the right in this group. This clever hat is of honey-beige felt.

Sometimes these crown flares take on exaggerated lines, as is instanced in the attractive model shown first in this collection of advance millinery modes. A wide flare cut from white felt is here posed on a snug-fitting black velvet toque, giving the impression of an imposing beret.

Contrasting the felt hat which glories in its brimlessness are many new ripple-brim collapsible (because of their suppleness) velvet hats. Many of these are tinged with gleaming metal, most often in the form of machine stitching.

The two models shown in this picture are typical of a popular mode. The ripple brim of the one to the right is stitched with gold thread, with tiny gilt beads edging its rim. Metal ribbon ties about its crown. The other velvet hat is just such as women are choosing for their "first" hat this autumn.

The Man with Three Names

by Harold MacGrath

COPYRIGHT BY THE BELL SYNDICATE INC.

"I wish to ask you some questions, frankly. Why do you hate me?"

"I do not hate you. My attitude is absolutely impersonal."

"That's blunt enough. What would you say if I expressed the opinion that you carried out your part of the bargain, and that the hour had arrived for me to carry out mine?"

A long pause.

"Events have made that impossible. I release you."

"You do not hold me, then? Still, I am a good loser. I will introduce you to my daughter."

"Between your daughter and me there is the space of two worlds. I regret that folly on board the ship. Moreover, I am a poor man. Every dollar I have in this world I earn by honest labor."

"I don't quite get that. I have been duly informed that you have on deposit nearly half a million."

Another pause.

"That money does not belong to me, Mr. Mansfield."

That was the end of the conversation.

Mansfield then wrote two letters. The first was local. It was to the chief of police. It demanded as quickly as possible a good photograph of Brandon Cathewe. It did not matter how it was obtained. The second letter was directed to a celebrated detective agency in New York. The best man they had was wanted immediately.

"Dinner is served, sir," announced the butler from the doorway.

"Is Miss Betty down?"

"She begs to be excused, sir."

Mansfield ran upstairs and rapped on the door of his daughter's boudoir.

"It is father, Betty. Are you ill?"

"No, daddy. Just tired and head achy."

"May I come in?"

He heard the key turn in the lock, and he pushed in the door. He saw instantly that she had been crying.

"I . . . I saw that article in the Herald," she sobbed. "It made me wild with fury. After you have done so much for Bannister!"

A warm glow pervaded his heart.

"You mustn't waste any tears on that twaddle, Betty. It's just politics; it's all a part of the game."

"Come along to dinner. I've got a surprise for you. I'm sending for your aunt, your mother's sister. You ought not to be the only woman in this big house. Your aunt is a charming woman. And there is one thing, little lady, I want you always to remember. Your mother's fortune makes you rich in your own right. Do as you please with it. And when the day comes and you find a man of your fancy, marry him. I'll trust you to pick out one worth while."

He laughed, tucked her arm under his, and led her to the stairs.

Around about ten that night you would have found her on the floor before her boudoir fire, reading her letters. She would read so far into a letter, and then a picture would drift in between: blue sky, blue water, the vague scent of clover, and an odd young man bending over flat stones.

She wanted to throw the letters into the fire. It was impossible. She knew that she would have regretted the act throughout her life. But to find some way out of the thralldom!

She put the letters in a Florentine box, which she restored to a drawer. She was about to close this when her eye was attracted by a slip of paper. It was a typewritten list of the bonds and stocks and accumulated funds of which her private fortune consisted. Away down toward the end she came upon something which she had not noticed previously: "Fifty shares the Banister Morning Herald!"

"The only way you can break an editor," she murmured, "is to buy his sheet and turn him adrift."

Thereupon a great and glorious idea popped into her head.

CHAPTER V.

George Cottar.

Mansfield could not read. He tossed his volume upon the table and got up. He lighted a cigar; then he went into the hall for his hat and topcoat. He left the house through the conservatory door.

It was moonlight, and a stroll about the gardens might settle this unusual mental turmoil.

He passed along the aisles of rose bushes. There were still some flowers in bloom. He pushed through the bushes to the next row, where there was a magnificent pink Arends. He cut it with his penknife and drew it through his buttonhole. He threw away his half-consumed cigar. Then he glanced again at Betty's window. It was dark.

In the very center of the gardens was a marble basin, with a faun seated at one end, his pipes emitting thin streams of water. The tinkle of the water sounded pleasantly on Mansfield's ears. Pipe tobacco; and good tobacco, too. One of the gardeners? No; they all smoked abominable weed.

"Who's there?" he demanded sharply.

The shadow began to move. Mansfield, being in vigorous health and sound of wind, ran along the path. He made a short cut, and arrived at the sidewalk as the other ran across the street diagonally. This maneuver set his face under the full glare of the street lamp.

Mansfield stopped. Cathewe, prowling around in the gardens? The fool, then, was really in love with Betty! He could give up the woman he loved for the sake of an ideal—an ideal which, if pursued unfalteringly, might break her father.

Mansfield returned to the house, his usually cold and precise brain off its balance. The whole affair was so absurd that it resembled a dream rather than a reality. He hung up his hat and coat mechanically, plucked the rose from the buttonhole, and proceeded to his room immersed in reverie.

He had missed something. No; it wasn't romance. He had had his fill of that—in steel. He knew what he had missed. It was the thing that had lured that fellow Cathewe to come prowling into the gardens, merely to stand under Betty's window. Love!

Slowly he rose, picked up the vase in which he had placed the flower, tiptoed into the hall, and set it before Betty's door.

Next morning Betty came into the breakfast room with a joyous rush. She was as pleasing to the eye as a summer cloud: in a filmy white, a pink boudoir cap on her head, and the rose pinned to her bodice.

"Daddy Mansfield, did you put this rose by my door?"

He could not answer her directly. "I thought perhaps you had gone to bed. There won't be many more this year."

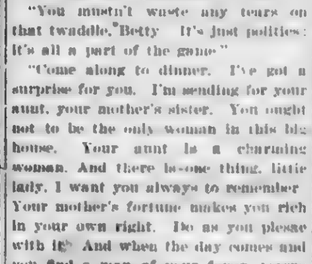
She walked over to him and stooped. "You may kiss me for that." He took her head between his palms and kissed both her cheeks, soundly. She ran back to her chair and began to volley French at him. Finally he laughed.

"You're too much for me. My French is motor truck style."

"Daddy, I want to go back to France."

"But I need you, honey!" he cried. And as the words passed his lips, the miracle lay revealed. That was it, he needed her.

"Why do you need me, daddy?"—in a kind of terrified whisper.



"Because I love you. Because I've only just found it out."

Red Top Cabs Have Become of Real Worth to Columbus—Of Which They Are a Part

Officials' Progressiveness and Willingness to Accept Constructive Criticism Largely Responsible for the Red Top Cab Company's Growth and Success.

(C) By JACK PHILLIPS

Ten or fifteen years ago it was a mark of distinction and sometimes a rather costly one, to use a taxi in riding about Columbus on business or pleasure. Nowadays, it's different. Citizens of the city call a taxi with as little hesitancy as they use the telephone. Many factors have contributed to bring about this change, leading among them being the Red Top Cab Company, and its growing fleet of cabs.

The cabs of this concern have earned high standing in public regard. That they are looked upon as a convenience rather than a luxury, as an economy, rather than an extravagance, is due to the way they have been operated by Fred W. Wotring, head of the company, and the men in charge of the cabs themselves.

The one dominating aim of the entire organization is to give Columbus a cab service that will rank with the best, and one which the city will have complete confidence in, and be glad to patronize. From the newest driver to the president of the firm, the organization is dedicated to public service and it brings to its work a sense of responsibility that makes it a real factor in the public's welfare.

To popularize the use of cabs the company has done two things. It has put into service an ever increasing fleet of comfortable cabs that cover the city thoroughly and holds a force in reserve for emergencies. The Red Top Cabs never fail you—within a few minutes after your telephone call the cab is at your door. The second thing the company has done is to provide its service at one of the lowest rates in effect anywhere in the country. It enables the public to travel quickly, comfortably and cheaply.

This is possible only because in developing its service the management has developed its market as well. The cabs are used by men, women and children. They are used freely because passengers know the charge is small.

Business men hurrying to appointments, travelers going to the depots, women returning home from shopping, children going to school, couples going to dances, theatres, dinner parties—everyone uses the Red Top cabs.

The company literally carries the major portion of the city's taxi riding public, and carries them safely, quickly and courteously. Its drivers are skilled, know the city and take pride in the service. They perform hundreds of favors daily. They are considerate, intelligent, courteous, and never argue. All are married men and not one of them is less than 25 years of age. As a matter of fact the company does not employ a man unless he possesses these two qualifications. Incoming visitors to the city often comment upon the favorable impression they create. With them the rule is safety first and courtesy all the time.

Their courtesy is unfailing to passengers, to pedestrians, to other drivers.

Winter or summer, rain or shine, the Red Top cabs are always on the job. Officials of the company note an ever increasing business from car owners who often call its cabs rather than take their own cars out of the garage. In fact, its cabs are becoming to mean to the public today what the street cars did before the motor age reached its high development.

No institution in the city is more efficient in supplying the public's transportation needs than the Red Top Cab Company. Its success is simply a case of a business growing with the city's growing appreciation of its service.

The new Hudson River vehicular tunnel connecting New York and New Jersey must be ventilated in such a way that the health of drivers using the tunnel will not be endangered. Instead of the air being forced in at one end and sucked out at the other, the system that is being tested out brings the fresh air in at frequent intervals from a duct beneath the roadway, and the impure gases flow into the upper duct and out of the tunnel by way of large stacks in ventilating buildings.

The $3,000,000 Shedd Aquarium in Grant Park, Chicago, will, when completed, be the largest aquarium in the world. There will be over 130 permanent exhibition tanks which will hold a greater variety of fish than any other aquarium can boast. There will also be about 80 tanks in which reserve supplies of fish can be kept for replacement purposes. The New York City aquarium is now the largest in the world. It has 80 tanks and 20 reserve tanks. The Philadelphia aquarium has 80 tanks, but no reserve tanks. Two huge reservoirs, with a total capacity of 2,000,000 gallons of water, half fresh and half salt, will be built in connection with the Chicago aquarium. Among the interesting features will be two of the largest practical tanks in the world. In these representatives of the giant fish will be kept.

Memorial Park

Is a source of Inspiration as well as of Respect. It is a place not so much for the dead as it is for the living.

It is much like the flowers which are sent to the home when a friend is gone. Those roses or carnations with their fragrance and the tender thought which prompted their sending shows respect for the one who has passed away, to be sure, but their chief object is to comfort and to uphold the loved ones who are left behind.

So it is with Memorial Park. Its beauty shows the highest regards for the departed; by its artistic arrangement it brings peace and promise of future life to those in sorrow. It is a place so like Nature's own most beautiful landscape spot that little children will admire rather than fear. For only by the turning of the mind toward Life and Beauty instead of toward death and decay can Memorial Park have the proper effect upon the folk to whom it belongs.

Register!

Two days yet remain in which electors may register to be eligible to vote at the coming November election.

The coming election is perhaps of more interest to Hilltop residents than usual from the fact that two Hilltop men are candidates for city council.

This year the Hilltop has an opportunity to elect a man to council, but it will take registering and voting to do it.

Every Hilltop resident should register either next Friday or Saturday, if they have not already done so., and help put a Hilltop man in council.

It is not enough that you alone register, but urge your friends to do likewise.

For the pleasure of Mrs. Bayard C. Temple (Katherine Christine Mohn), Mrs. Emery Day, 165 S. Harris Ave., entertained with a miscellaneous shower Tuesday evening, Oct. 11. The names of Edward Lake and Walter Reinhard were omitted from the list comprising members of the orchestra of the Hilltop School of Music.

FRENCH SAYS LEVY IS O. K.

Expert Service of Police and Firemen Call For Increased Pay.

The one-third of a mill levy providing for a $35 monthly increase in the salaries of firemen and policemen is characterized by Chief of Police Harry E. French as a "vote of trust." The proposal will come up for vote at the November election.

"A policeman and fireman is constantly in danger of laying down his life in the protection of Columbus and they do so unflinchingly," says Chief French.

"It is just a part of the day's work with them. They can have no assurance when they leave their homes that they ever will be back again. Reach for your phone and soon they are speeding to your call. Death may be their fate. Just a short time ago Motorcycle Officer Horace D. Elliott was killed when his machine skidded while speeding to the assistance of an injured fellow officer.

"Our men are rendering expert service. Yet they are paid at the rate of $160 a month on the common labor basis. We have to pass very rigid examination. We have to keep ourselves physically and mentally fit. We have to appear in clean, well pressed uniforms with our equipment in good shape.

"We have waited a long time for a raise. But no one can say we have not been loyal. Columbus is a safe place in which to live. Rates on burglary insurance have been reduced. Fire losses have been considerable less than in other cities of similar size. An under paid fire and police department has made it so.

"Is it not obvious that if you vote this increase in wages, you will be purchasing a greater peace and security?" asks French.

The Elito Embroidery club members and husbands spent a most delightful evening Saturday, Oct. 15, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Fisher of Haines Ave. The occasion was a complete surprise on Mr. Fisher in celebration of his birthday. Those who were present to enjoy the occasion were: Mr. and Mrs. D. U. Creagor, Mr. and Mrs. D. D. Jenkins, Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. Don Latham, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Hoodenbelt, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Spangler, Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Rees, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Hoagleman and Mr. and Mrs. A. W. WEST LOSES TO CENTRAL Close Game Ends In Score of 6-0 In Favor of Central Eleven.

West High school went down to defeat at the hands of the Central High eleven on the Central field last Friday afternoon by a score of 6-0. The game was closely contested from the beginning and the Central team had no easy time in taking the ball over for the one time.

Central is now in line for first place in the city league along with North who they meet this week at the new North stadium.

West plays Athens at Athens this week-end. No reports from Athens have been received concerning the strength of their team. Heretofore West has been somewhat unsuccessful in their out-of-town trips, but the local team is holding much confidence in their strength in the coming game with Athens.

Several have planned to use their cars for the trip to see the game. Roads between here and Athens are in good shape except for a few spots of improvements.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Churton and sons John, Dan and Paul, and Mr. Dongalby of Huntington, W. Va., were guests over the week-end at the home of Mrs. Churton's mother, Mrs. Isabel Burnside, 92 N. Powell Ave., and attended the state-Northwestern football game.

Chief French emphasized the dangers encountered by our policemen in their line of duty and urged an increase in the salaries of these men who face great danger in protecting law abiding citizens, from criminals who count life cheap.

The audience was greatly pleased with the 6A group of songs, "Rain," "Santa Lucia" and "The Tailor and the Mouse," conducted by Miss Mary Phelan.

TO BUILD HALL AT VALLEY VIEW

SEWERS MAY BE ONLY CESS POOLS

Investigation Shows Conditions Are Worse; Manholes Have More Sewage Than Before.

A definition of 'cess pools" and "sewers" was given at the meeting of the Hilltop Association for Permanent Sewer Relief at their meeting on Monday evening, Oct. 17, at the K. of P. hall.

With these definitions in mind a report was given as to sewer conditions on the Hilltop and it was reported that in many cases Hilltop sewers might easily be called cess pools.

A few weeks ago an investigation was made as to the sewage in several manholes of the Hilltop and some relief was promised, says the committee, but again last week the same manholes were inspected and found to have as much as three feet more sewage in them than was there on the former inspection. The conditions continue to grow worse says the committee.

The market house bond issue and the firemen and police levy were also discussed.

The next meeting will be held Monday night, Oct. 24th, at the K. of P. hall, Burgess and Broad.

CHURCH BLAZE BELIEVED SET

West Broad Street Presbyterian Church Damaged Set at $1700.

Fire originating in the choir room of the West Broad Street Presbyterian church on Friday night, Oct. 14, caused a damage of $1760 it is estimated.

The fire was discovered by Police Corporal Wynn. Just previous to the fire in the church, firemen had extinguished a small blaze in a restaurant at 1079½ W. Broad St., just a block west of the church.

The blaze originated in the choir room of the church near some of the church music which had just been used by members of the choir in their practice. Miss Norma Thomas, 62 Hawkes Ave., said she was the last of the choir members to leave the building and that the fires and lights were all out.

Firemen saved the pipe organ from heavy damage by spreading a heavy canvass over it to keep the water off.

Fire Chief Nice stated that the fire appeared to have been set. Nothing definite has been found.

Mrs. Ruth Gill of 2338½ W. Broad St., will entertain the members of the "Who" club Thursday evening. All members are urged to attend the meeting as the activities for the winter will be taken up. Each member is asked to take one article, value 25c, to replenish the fund for charity.

The Eleventh Ward Republican club will hold their regular meeting Oct. 24 at 8 o'clock in the upstairs room of the Hillcrest Baptist church.

SCHOOL LEVY UP TO VOTERS

Approval of 3-Mill Levy Will Produce $1,800,000 Annually for Schools.

The following statement concerning the 3-mill school levy was written by C. J. Randall, president of the board of education, that people of the Hilltop may learn first hand just what this levy means to the schools of Columbus.

A 3-mill school levy is being submitted November 8 for the approval of the voters of the Columbus school district. This is a renewal of the 2.4 mill levy now in effect. For the past eight years the Ohio laws have provided for part of school funds by a certain limited tax levy. The laws further provide that the remainder be subject to approval of the people at certain periods, thereby giving local control over part of the expenditures for school purposes. In keeping with this policy the voters of Columbus approved a 3-mill levy in 1920 for five years and a 2.4 mill levy in 1925 for three years. The present 2.4 mill levy expires in June, 1928, making it necessary to submit the question of the 3 mill levy this November.

It is of greatest importance that this 3 mill levy be approved if the schools are to be maintained in accordance with the standards which have been established. A conservative estimate shows this amount to be necessary. The 3 mill levy produces approximately $1,800,000 annually, for operating expenses, which sum is more than one-third of the actual annual needs for such purposes. A conservative estimate of the needs for operating purposes shows the following amounts:

1928—$4,452,486	1931—$5,252,558
1930—$4,997,068	1933—$5,708,558

These amounts are necessary to pay salaries of 1450 teachers and principals, 230 janitors and engineers, and furnish repairs, supplies, fuel and light for 77 school buildings of this city, which house 42,000 school children. These estimates include a modest annual increase, made necessary by an annual increase in enrollment of over 1400 pupils.

Failure to approve of this levy would place the schools of Columbus in a very embarrassing position. It would be impossible to contract with teachers and maintain schools for a longer term than six months.

Honoring Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dunn of 23 S. Terrace St., who are leaving the city to take up their residence in Newark, Ohio, Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Wolf entertained Friday evening at their home, 606 Columbian Ave. The following were present: Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dunn and sons Ralph and Howard, Mr. and Mrs. Oscie D. Steel and children Kenneth, Harold and Mildred Ann, Mr. Richard Wolf and the host and hostess. Mr. and Mrs. Dunn were also pleasantly surprised by a number of Friends Saturday evening.

TULIPS, IRIS FOR HIGHLAND

Pupils and Parent-Teacher Association Donate Flowers to School.

By Marguerite Kilpatrick

The 9A pupils last year donated funds for Darwin tulips for the school grounds. The Parent-Teacher association are now donating iris. The shrubbery that is around the building at this time does not bloom while school is in session and they have established this means to have flowers in blossom when the pupils are here.

It is planned to plant these flowers in front of the shrubbery and to plant a circular bed around the base of the flagpole. There will be nearly 400 each of tulips and iris.

The Tutahi and Odakonia Camp Fire groups will have a hallowe'en party Thursday evening in the portable building.

A general assembly was held Tuesday, Oct. 11, in the Glenwood church. After a short musical program by the Harmony quartet and Mr. Chenille, Mr. Keighley spoke briefly on "The Aims and Purposes of the Junior High School," directed especially to the new pupils.

Jackson, vice chairman; Mrs. John E. Allison, treasurer and Mrs. Hite, secretary. Refreshments were served by the hostess, assisted by Mrs. Nettie Elliott, Miss Dora Johnston, Mrs. Robert Carnahan and Mrs. B. Bell.

Class Work As Taught By Edna Fox Zirkel

At the Hilltop School of Music.

A great deal of interest has been shown in the Class Work in Voice Training as instituted by Edna Fox Zirkel at the Hilltop School of Music, Broad and Eldon.

This form of teaching is somewhat new to Columbus as Voice Teaching has here-to-fore been confined to individual and private lessons.

Class Work offers an opportunity to those desiring some knowledge of singing without the intensive training required by those who desire to become soloists.

These classes will receive careful voice training, the art of singing songs and appreciation of music. Close attention is given to general results, but owing to the size of the classes and the short period of work, attention cannot be given to the individual as is given in private lessons.

The classes for adults meet on Tuesday evening at 7:30 and for children on Saturday morning at 10:30.

Mrs Zirkel has had great success with such classes at her private studio at 63½ East Gay St.

Romeo and Juliet passed out of existence years ago and even attempts at imitating them have failed in most cases in years gone by. So did the long skirt, but Paris hints that the old styles are coming back. There may yet be a successful Romeo if the long skirts will hold a girl to earth long enough to make her feel the presence of a modern Romeo.

A Real Estate Dealer Who Has Found The Way To Grow

By Making the Best Interests of His Customers His First Consideration, J. C. Nagle Has Become An Outstanding Leader in the Realty Field.

(C) By JACK PHILLIPS

Today, as ever before, the home is the symbol of civilization's progress. Thus a real estate firm is a great factor in the life of a community because it is a source of homes. As a connecting link between buyer and seller, between landlord and tenant, J. C. Nagle has grown to a point where he occupies a position of undisputed leadership in the real estate business.

Mr. Nagle has gained the enviable reputation of being a real estate dealer who gives satisfaction both ways. Landlords and sellers are sure when he handles their property that they are in good hands. The tenant and home buyer are sure of fair treatment, reasonable terms and the keeping of bargains both according to the letter and the spirit.

Just at present when an almost unprecedented amount of building is being undertaken in this and many other sections of the country, the real estate dealer is more than ever a much needed person. Well versed in the characteristics of his community, he is able to recommend the best locations for homes and the most promising sites for business and industrial establishments.

Mr. Nagle always has such places in plenty and can give the prospective buyer the advantages of years of experience and observation as he has long been identified with the growth of Columbus and particularly the West Side.

Home buyers when dealing through this office are assured of not paying more than a fair price as expert appraisement always precede sales, and moreover it is not unusual for Mr. Nagle to refuse to list property for which the seller is asking more than a fair price.

Those who are seeking investments where they are not only assured a permanent source of income, but a reasonable certainty of increase in value would do well to look over the large list of desirable properties at this agency as many of them are offered at prices and terms that cannot fail but be attractive to the intending purchaser.

Not only in a business way has Mr. Nagle been forging ahead, but all useful civic moves find ready support from him; co-operation and progressiveness, the better to serve the public, are among his chief aims and accomplishments.

Nagle's offices are located at 1572 Sullivant Ave.

Stop-Look-Read!

If You Have Pride in Citizenship You Will Not Neglect Your First, Prime and Essential Duty, as a Citizen.

THAT FIRST DUTY IS TO HAVE A PART IN CIVIC AFFAIRS AND CIVIL GOVERNMENT!

The Will of the People Is Expressed at the Ballot Box! Do Not Allow Minorities to Govern and Dictate Elections and Civic Policies.

You Cannot Perform Your First Great Duty of Citizenship, If You Fail to Obey the Election Laws Governing Registration!

COLUMBUS IS AN ANNUAL GENERAL REGISTRATION CITY, UNDER THE Elections Code. This Means That YOU Must Register This Year! Don't Neglect YOUR Duty!

YOUR LAST CHANCES TO REGISTER

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 21st

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 22nd

HOURS FOR REGISTRATION: 8 a. m. to 2 p. m. and from 4 p. m. to 9 p. m.

And when casting your ballot on November 8th remember that you are deeply interested in the peace, welfare and safety of your home city, and the wage, and working conditions of your policemen and firemen, on whom you rely, and depend for protection and safety, for yourself and family in time of fire, flood, robbery, danger or distress!

If you appreciate faithful service from the Department of Public Safety, of your city, you will of course vote for the 1-3 Mill Levy, which will make possible the salary adjustments for your firemen and policemen.

This proposal is first upon the Levy and Bond ballot.

ELECTION HELD IN THE CITY OF COLUMBUS, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO, NOVEMBER 8, 1927.

A tax for the benefit of the City of Columbus for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of said City at a rate not exceeding 1-3 mill for a period of three years, including the current year.

MARK YOUR BALLOT THUS:

X	FOR THE TAX LEVY
	AGAINST THE TAX LEVY

Seven hundred and thirty-four faithful firemen and policemen will benefit from the ratification of this proposal, which was unanimously submitted by action of your city council.

The additional assessment amounts to but 90 cents per annum on a property listed at $3,000.00. Surely this is a minimum consideration when one considers his premium on fire, theft and life insurance, all of which rates are computed on the security of life and property in the city, wherein one resides, and wherein the greatest factor in determining rates is the efficiency of the Fire and Police Departments.

May we not have favorable consideration, and your affirmative vote in this matter?

Respectfully

THE FIRE AND POLICE ADJUSTMENT COMMITTEE

THE COURSE OF TRUE LOVE LEADS TO THE GROCERY AND MEAT MARKET

And If the Dealer Is the Right Kind—Like the Hauntz Grocery and Meat Market—It Leads to Health and Happiness.

Every woman who weds realizes quickly that she faces a duty that is at once a problem and a task. She becomes the purchasing agent for the firm of man and wife. Without previous experience or expert training she is called upon to make the money her husband earns buy the greatest possible amount of happiness for the family.

First and foremost, she seeks a firm handling groceries and meats, for here a considerable portion of her income must be spent daily. She is fortunate indeed if her footsteps lead her to such a concern as the Hauntz Grocery and Meat Market. For the moment she enters the door, her problem is two-thirds solved. Inexperience here is less of a handicap because it is met with a store policy that promotes thrift and helps the patron purchase with skill and discretion. Many a family in this city, if it did but know it, owes a large part of the success with which its household is operated to the experience and understanding of this firm. They know the public's needs and they soon learn to know the individual needs, tastes and requirements of each patron.

Hauntz's stores are great places in which to shop. Sanitation plus—everywhere. And the finest of equipment for preserving meats, vegetables and food stuffs in their most natural freshness. Mr. Ray G. Hauntz, the proprietor, and of course the buyer for its various stocks, knows the purchasing end from A to Z, but he knows still more when it comes to keeping them fresh and tempting. His handling and storage methods represent the latest ideas in use. And the refrigeration system is ideal. All perishable foods are not only scientifically iced but are protected from every source of possible contamination. They go to the housewife's kitchen with the firm's assurance of purity—and that assurance has been found to have 100 per cent value.

The greatest test of the firm's merit is its popularity with the women of the community. Its trade covers the entire West Side. It is a local proverb that "If you want to see somebody go to Hauntz' Markets—you'll not have to wait long." Seemingly the greater portion of the community does its marketing at one of its stores, if not at 2516 West Broad St., then at 2760 West Broad St., corner of Hague.

The firm's reputation for quality is outstanding. Its stock is every line is full, varied and very select. The housewife has learned that Hauntz' products are the standard, that the price is the right price, that the goods are dependable. She would learn the reason for this if she watched the inner working of the markets for even a day. No firm is more scrupulously careful that its goods shall measure up to the highest standard of excellence.

Taken by and large, the Hauntz Grocery and Meat Markets have reached a point where they add much to the efficiency of this community as a buying center.

Mother's Cook Book

Every occupation fits itself with the enlarging life of him who practices it. The occupation that will not do that no man really has a right to occupy himself about.

SEASONABLE IDEAS

Now that the mushroom season is on, it is wise to put up for winter use the surplus found in the fields. They make delicious sauces, and various dishes when served with a few mushrooms are quite out of the ordinary. They may be spiced and pickled like any other vegetable.

Mushroom Catsup.

Gather fresh mushrooms and pack them in alternate layers of salt in a stone jar. Let stand for twenty-four hours. Chop fine after standing and mix well. Let stand for two more days, then drain: Place the strained liquid in a kettle and bring to the boiling point and boil three minutes. To every four cupfuls of the liquid add one cupful of good vinegar (cider vinegar is best). Add one tablespoonful of cayenne pepper, three of allspice, two of ginger, one of cloves and one-half of mace. Boil until reduced to half the amount then bottle and seal while hot.

Pickled Onions.

Pour boiling water over small white pickling onions to loosen the skins. Peel them, soak in strong brine twenty-four hours. Wash and place in a preserving kettle and cover with one part skimmed milk and two parts water. Boil gently for ten minutes. Drain, wash again and pour into bottles. Fill with hot spiced vinegar. Seal in the usual manner. The milk keeps the onions from turning yellow, it is said.

Scrambled Eggs With Corn.

Take one cupful of freshly grated corn, one cupful of milk, one tablespoonful of finely minced green pepper, one tablespoonful of butter and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Put the corn, pepper and half of the milk in a saucepan and cook five minutes. Beat the eggs and add the rest of the milk, add to the corn and cook slowly until set. Add butter and salt if needed and serve on slices of buttered toast.

Ginger Punch.

Chop three-fourths of a pound of canton ginger, add one quart of water, one cupful of sugar and boil twenty minutes. Cool and add three tablespoonfuls of ginger syrup, three-fourths of a cupful of orange juice, one-half cupful of lemon juice and large pieces of ice. Stir until well chilled and add one quart of apollinaris water.

Tasty Cheese Straw Adds Needed Flavor to Salad

Sometimes a tasty cheese cracker or cheese straw adds just the touch to a salad that is needed to make it seem a course out of the ordinary. Accessories of this kind are especially good at luncheon or suppers when guests are invited, or for serving with a salad that is the main dish among party refreshments. Cheese straws may be included by way of variety on any occasion where sandwiches or crackers would be served. The United States Department of Agriculture gives the following recipe for making them:

Cheese Straws

One cupful flour, one-half teaspoonful salt, four tablespoonfuls fat, one cupful grated cheese, one-sixteenth teaspoonful cayenne, two tablespoonfuls water.

Cut the flour, salt, fat and one-half of the cheese together with a biscuit cutter until the mass is blended. Add the water and mix well. Toss on a slightly floured board and roll two or three times until the dough is smooth. Sprinkle one-half the remainder of the cheese and roll again. Repeat this until all the cheese is used. Roll the mass out about one-quarter inch thick. Cut in strips one-half inch wide and six inches long. Place the strips on a baking sheet and bake until a delicate brown in a moderate oven about 400 degrees Fahrenheit.

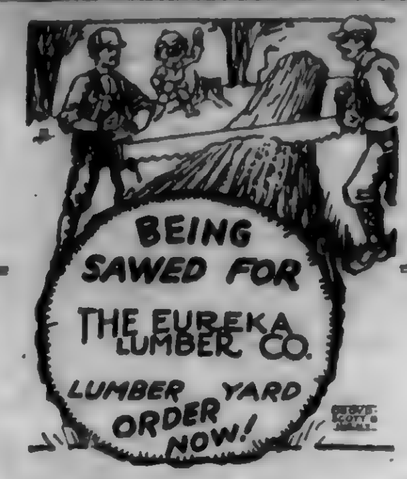
Before You Criticize— INVESTIGATE!

IN a certain city is a brick pavement which is the butt of continuous criticism—its rough and traffic-worn surface the bane of the neighborhood.

And yet that particular pavement, so bitterly criticized, is 34 years old. Planned and built for light traffic, it has for the last decade carried ponderously laden motor trucks. It has seen three successive pavements of another material wrecked and replaced on a neighboring light-traffic street.

To date that veteran pavement hasn't had a dollar of repair work put on it and the pavement can at any time be relaid with upwards of 90% salvage of the original brick.



The next time you drive over a brick pavement that isn't as smooth as a billiard table, find out before you criticize, whether it is 20, or 25, or 30, or 35 years old.

Before you criticize, investigate.

Cathewe's newspaper, for all that it was losing money daily, was a success. Its editorial opinions began to be copied far and wide across the land. He thought and wrote clearly upon all subjects. His editorials were full of punch and prophecy.

But he was losing money. He had heard tales about Moloch, and now he understood. Each additional boost in his circulation made a corresponding loss. Without the local advertisements this ascending popularity was becoming more and more costly. And any day his stockholders might sell out. This would not nullify his control, but it might add infinite confusion, internal warfare.

So far he had won two big battles. He had made the health department an efficient organization and he had blocked a deal by the local traction company (Mansfield's) to charge a six cent fare. And he had made the last election of Mansfield's congressional candidate extremely difficult.

At noon one day in October Cathewe came down for his breakfast, a frown between his eyes.

"What is it, sonny?" asked his mother.

"What is what?"

"The meaning of that frown."

"Oh, well, I had a curious experience at the office last night. I heard an ahem and looked up. Bang! went a flashlight; and before I could recover from my astonishment, the photographer had vanished. Took a picture of me—stole it. But I can't let that worry me. I must get that new book done. Our funds are getting low."

Shortly after, he entered his study and closed the door. She saw no more of him until four, when he signaled that he was off for a walk in the hills.

He had not been gone more than twenty minutes when Nancy's smart runabout stopped at the curb. Two or three times a week she carried Mrs. Cathewe off for a ride in the country.

At the same hour today father's chariot of mercy rolled under the Mansfield porte cochere. But more of that anon.

Mrs. Cathewe had to change, so for a few moments Nancy was left to her own devices. She saw the study door wide open and stepped across the threshold. Books were scattered over the floor, the air filled with the strong scent of tobacco, a desk littered with paper, a wicker basket filled to the brim with closely written sheets, a waste basket choked with crumpled, discarded efforts.

The one thing that had a touch of orderliness was the stack of blank paper arranged before the empty chair. She could see that something had been written on the top sheet, so she bent to see what it was. A name, repeated many times.

"George Cottar," "George Cottar," repeated perhaps a dozen times.

"George Cottar!" She spoke the name aloud. A pile of manuscript and the name of George Cottar! The illumination left her temporarily blinded. The Brushwood Boy—George Cottar—Brandon Cathewe! Why, Braud was the novelist; and hiding his light under the bushel like this! What did that signify?

Impulsively she reached down into the waste basket and picked up one of the crumpled sheets, and smoothed it out. A rejected sheet; he would never miss it. So she folded it and put it in a pocket. Then she stole forth, her eyes shining and her cheeks aflame.

* * * * * * * *

Mansfield had an odd experience—for him—that afternoon. A representative of the local merchants called to ask him to release them from their promise regarding the boycott of the Herald.

"We are sorry, Mr. Mansfield," he announced, "but we can't carry this on any longer. We don't want to offend you or lose the trade of the thousands you employ, but we have come to the conclusion that it would be far more profitable for us to cater to the other seventy-odd thousand and let your people go. What answer shall I carry back?"

"That they are under no further obligations," answered Mansfield quietly.

"Our thanks, Mr. Mansfield. We shall renew our contracts with the Herald at once."

As he went out he passed Doctor Maddox coming in.

"John," Mansfield said, "I sent for you because I wish to ask an honest man a few simple questions."

Maddox, plainly distressed, pulled his beard. "What's happened to you?"

"An inconceivable thing. I've fallen in love with something."

"What?"

"My daughter."

"Nothing abnormal about that. Tell me what you want to, and I'll answer as an honest friend."

"What do you know about this fellow Brandon Cathewe?"

"I know him to be as clean and white as a hound's tooth, Dunleigh. I'm glad you have fallen in love with Betty. It's bound to change your point of view. You've made Bannister prosperous, but on a rotten foundation. You have set out to break Cathewe because he is the first man who ever dared oppose you openly. And I don't believe you will succeed."

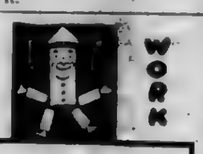
ONLY USED CARS THAT BUILD CONFIDENCE PROVE PROFITABLE TO THE DEALER IN THE LONG RUN

By Conducting Its Used Car Department Upon This Principle, The Belt-Franklin Auto Company Has Made It One of the Most Successful in the City.

The price that is paid for any commodity is important only in relation to the value received. This is particularly true when it comes to used cars. For while there are many good values in used cars there are likewise a host of problems that confront the inexperienced purchaser. The best way to eliminate these problems is to buy of an established and reputable dealer, and among these dealers in Columbus whose reputations protect the buyer and guarantee good value, it is safe to assert than none take higher rank than The Belt-Franklin Auto Company, well-known Franklin dealers at 222-224 East Gay St. By always conducting its business upon the highest plane of frankness and square dealing it has won the public's confidence and at the same time made its used car department one of the largest and most successful in the city.



Confidence is the basis of all business, but in no other field of activity does it mean more than in the selling of used cars. Realizing this fact, Mr. O. C. Belt, head of the company makes it a point to see that no car leaves its place unless it will make for the firm a permanent friend and customer. Like other progressive automobile men he knows that the confidence of his customers is his most valuable business asset. He also knows that the man who buys a used car today may buy a new one tomorrow.

Unquestionably there are men who feel a relief when a customer drives off with an old automobile. Such men proceed upon the principle that their entire duty lies in making the sale and getting the purchaser into the street under his own motion. From then on they believe the responsibility for the performance of the car rests entirely with the new owner. With the Belt-Franklin Company such destructive ideas have no place in any phase of its business. Every car sold must be just what it is represented to be. In some instances it may be more, but in no instance must it be less. The salesman has strict instructions to answer such and every question truthfully. In other words, principle is always placed before policy—the good-will of the customer before sales.

When quality and care has gone into the manufacture of an automobile, it is not unusual for them to give thousands and thousands of miles of service after their original owners have parted with them. It is a fact beyond dispute that a good used car can be purchased more cheaply and will provide better service than a cheap new one. The quality of materials and workmanship is not limited in a used car by the price paid, but on the contrary, by the price it was made to sell for when new. Thus the final purchaser while getting the benefit of lasting quality intended for the original buyer—pays only the used car price.

Excepting the automobiles in the factory and salesroom every car in a used car. That a car has been used and has given satisfaction is in itself a guarantee of value, and one of the conditions which The Belt-Franklin Auto Company attaches to its cars is that they have a larger potential service left in them, than the final buyer will have to pay for in dollars and cents. Nor is this the only thing that makes one of its cars a good investment. There is the saving which comes with the elimination of the first depreciation, the government tax and the delivery cost. Then too, one pays mighty for the accessories generally found on a used car.

An established reputation like that of The Belt-Franklin Company is not cheaply and quickly acquired, but once attained it is worth one hundred times what it costs, and this company's success proves it.

"Don Juan" at Ritz Sunday and Monday

"Don Juan," the wonder picture, with John Barrymore, the screen favorite, is to be shown at the Ritz theater next Sunday and Monday, Oct. 23 and 24.

Manager Steve Duros announced that the picture had been selected so as to offer the best to people of the Hilltop at popular prices. The same picture ran several weeks at a downtown theater with the Vitaphone attachment. Screen critics say "Don Juan" is one of the greatest pictures that has ever been produced.

Memorial Park

Is a source of Inspiration as well as of Respect. It is a place not so much for the dead as it is for the living.

It is much like the flowers which are sent to the home when a friend is gone. Those roses or carnations with their fragrance and the tender thought which prompted their sending shows respect for the one who has passed away, to be sure, but their chief object is to comfort and to uphold the loved ones who are left behind.

So it is with Memorial Park. Its beauty shows the highest regards for the departed; by its artistic arrangement it brings peace and promise of future life to those in sorrow. It is a place so like Nature's own most beautiful landscape spot that little children will admire rather than fear. For only by the turning of the mind toward Life and Beauty instead of toward death and decay can Memorial Park have the proper effect upon the folk to whom it belongs.

In addition to the great number of residences under construction there are two four-family apartment houses being erected on Columbian avenue just south of Sullivant and another four-family apartment block on Richardson just east of John Burroughs school, and another on Hague avenue east of the new West High school.

Highland School

A Word from the Principal

Mr. Robert Craig, teacher of history here at Highland, who is serving the Hilltop Record in the capacity of news director for the school, has asked me to say a few words this week on the matter of school co-operation. I know of no better way to start such an article than to state the facts of such co-operation as has existed for some time between teachers and parents of Hilltop schools.

The Highland Junior High school, junior and elementary departments, has been recognized, throughout the city and over the state, as one of the best schools of its type. This recognition has been made possible because of the interest which parents of the Hilltop have taken in their school, and because of the desire which the principal and teachers have to render the best service possible in providing educational opportunity to the children under their care. Thinking people have known for some time that schools can do their best work, only, when parents and teachers work together; when parents come directly to the principal and teachers to talk over with them frankly their mutual problems; problems of attendance, courses of study, books, assigned lessons, home study, department, grades, and all such matters as are not usually fully understood without such conferences. The school always invites such mutual co-operation as the only satisfactory way to secure the best results for the boy and girl.

The Parent-Teacher association of the Highland Avenue school last year was the best attended of such organizations in the city. Through the courtesy of the Hilltop Record, I am taking this opportunity, however, to urge that as many parents as can find it possible, attend these meetings and get acquainted with the teachers of the school.

I wish to urge parents to follow up a first acquaintanceship by visiting the school frequently. If questions arise concerning the school welfare of your son or daughter come to the principal's office and get the facts. Never before has Highland had greater promise from a good beginning of a new school year. By the continued co-operation between parents and teachers greater results than ever before can be achieved. Take the first step, parents of new pupils, by joining the Parent-Teacher association and become a booster and a worker for your school.

H. H. Keighley.

Republican Women To Meet Nov. 11-12

The call for a state-wide meeting here Nov. 11 and 12 of the newly created Ohio Council of Republican Women, at which officers will be elected and the permanent organization completed, was sent out this week by Mrs. Wilma Sinclair LeVan, Republican national committeewoman for Ohio.

Mrs. LeVan announced that it is hoped to have every county in the state represented.

Purpose of the council according to Mrs. LeVan, is to organize every voting precinct in the state with capable workers, to foster organization of the younger element in the party and to furnish a medium whereby various Republican women's organizations now functioning may be brought into closer alliance.

One of the features of the meeting will be a pilgrimage to the Harding Memorial at Marion the morning of Nov. 11, the trip to be made by auto from Columbus.

Headquarters have been established at the Deshler hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Kirkpatrick, 584 S. Warren Ave., went to Ann Arbor, Friday, to attend the Ohio State-Michigan game.

HALLOWE'EN PARTY SCHEDULED FOR NEXT MONDAY EVENING

Fun Galore for All Who Will Come Out and Participate In the Festivities.

At a special meeting of the Hilltop Business Men's association Tuesday evening at the Matsonia, arrangements were made for the Hallowe'en party for the Hilltop next Monday night, when it is expected that the business section of the Hilltop will be the scene of much fun and pleasure.

Fred L. Sulzberger was made chairman of the committee on arrangements and he at once proceeded to appoint assistants until it looked like he would have nothing to do himself.

To assure good music for the occasion H. G. Deems and E. A. Phipps were put in charge of this feature of the party. C. W. Barrell has charge of the prizes.

The big feature of the party will be a parade in which everybody is urged to enter and help everybody else have a good time and lots of fun. The parade will form at Whitethorne avenue and Broad street and march west on Broad, past a judges stand, where prizes will be awarded. The judges for the occasion will be W. L. Millikin, Greer Orr and H. G. Butler.

It is expected that 16 prizes will be awarded for various costumes appearing in the parade.

It is hoped to make the night one of gayety and fun for everybody, and the kiddies especially, and parents are urged to bring their children and enjoy the fun with them.

To further help the revelers enjoy the evening, the merchants are asked to decorate their windows and have their stores lighted up to help add brilliancy to the evening.

Of course you will want to wear a mask as this will be a real Hallowe'en party which calls for the most grotesque makeup you can conceive. However, should you not care to mask, come out anyhow and enjoy the evening by being just yourself.

COWBOYS PLAY NORTH FRIDAY

Game to Be Played In New Stadium at 3:15; Play at Athens Nov. 5.

West High football eleven meets the Northern Polar Bears this Friday afternoon on the North territory at 3:15.

Last Saturday North celebrated and dedicated their new stadium with a win over Central High by a score of 21-6. North is one of the leading contenders for the city high school championship. They will meet the twice defeated West team in the new stadium Friday with the expectation of carrying on the good work.

The time of judging a football team by what other people say is passed and for that reason the rumor that West has many surprises scheduled for the Polar Bears holds but very little encouragement of the idea that West will prove a Waterloo for the strong North eleven.

West meets the Athens High team at Athens on Nov. 5.

THE 3-MILL SCHOOL LEVY

There should be no misunderstanding as to the 3-mill school levy which will be on the ballot in the Columbus school district in the November election. The schools are now operating on a levy of 2.4 mills which was voted three years ago, and expires with this year. The increase over what we authorized in 1924, therefore, is only six-tenths of a mill. Four year earlier, in 1920, a 3-mill levy had been authorized, the same as is proposed now.

Bear in mind, then, that only a very slight increase is proposed over the amount that we have been paying for the past seven years. The proposal would authorize a levy "for current expenses at a rate not exceeding 3 mills, for five years." If in any of the five years the budget would not show a necessity for the full 3 mills, the budget commission has, and would of course exercise, the power to levy only the smaller amount needed.

The proposition, then, merely places the schools in position of safety. As things now stand, this levy must be depended upon to raise about one-third of the entire expense of the schools, salaries of teachers, building repairs, maintenance and everything else. The board is thoroughly warranted, therefore, in saying that if this levy is defeated, it cannot make contracts with teachers guaranteeing the operation of the schools for the entire year.

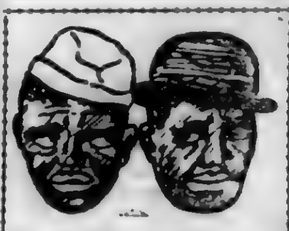
Will Columbus stand by her public schools? Will we risk serious damage to the educational interests of our own children by so cutting down the school revenue as to provide money for only two-thirds of the regular school year? This is just the danger we are facing, unless all friends of the schools stand together and work and vote for the 3-mill levy.—Columbus Dispatch, Oct. 13.

HAUNTZ'S CANDIDACY

There are a number of vitally important reasons why every voter on the West Side should go to the polls November 8 and vote for their fellow-West Sider, Ray G. Hauntz, for city councilman:

Hauntz is 34 years old, born and educated in Columbus. He is just the right age for public service. His experience and success in his business prove his qualifications for public service, and have given him an understanding of business.

Hauntz knows the needs of the West Side because he has lived with us for 16 years and for the past 11 has been in business. For years he has come in daily, intimate contact with our people in a business way, while his wide activities as a member of our fraternal orders, church and civic organizations have given him a still wider hold on our people socially. He owns property on the West Side and has substantial business investments among us. Certainly if anyone in our section is capable of voicing our opinions and getting things done for us in council it would be Hauntz.



Furthermore, the West Side should have a "go-getter" in council—a doer, rather than a talker. Every friend and acquaintance of Hauntz takes pride in the success he has achieved among us since he embarked in busines on the Hilltop back in 1916. He started with very little capital, yet today he is the owner of two thriving stores and everybody knows he has made good because he has been an absolutely square dealer and a tireless worker.

Hauntz, as a resident of the West Side, went through the disastrous flood of 1913 which affected the west section of our city and from the first day of that flood to the present time he has been found in the front rank of every movement for the betterment of our section.

A further substantial evidence of Hauntz's worth as a citizen is found in his election and his re-election as president of the Columbus Retail Grocers' association.

The city of Columbus needs Hauntz in council and it is vitally important, in view of the many projects affecting the West Side that will come before council during the next few years, that every West Sider do his full civic duty by helping to put Hauntz there.

Cloth Coats Are Enriched With Either Flat or Shaggy Furs

Now that unique flat pelts have entered so conspicuously into the fur mode, the season's handsomely befurred cloth coats became a theme of fascinating interest. As to the relative style prestige of novelty flat pelts versus showy long-haired furs for trimming, the mode casts fifty-fifty vote.

It therefore resolves itself into a matter of individual preference as to whether the new coat shall be distinguished with clever touches of calfskin, shaved lamb, spotted leopard, mole or ermine or whether it shall be lavishly collared, cuffed and bordered with tawny fox, wolf, badger, or fitch.

The models in this illustration present the subject of the fur-trimmed coat from two distinctly different angles. A very swagger type is defined by the mode to the left. For its development the stylist chooses an exquisitely fine beige duvetyn. Which brings to mind the fact of the prominence of "classy" suede finished weaves throughout the list of fashionable clothings.

The collar is of pale brown calfskin spotted with white, with a pocket of the same. This pocket is doubly unique in that it is equipped with a "locktite" attachment.

The other model stresses the lavishly befurred coat type. It is said that luxuriously furred cloth wraps are proving a formidable competitor to the all-fur coat. It seems as if there is no limit to the extravagance of furs bestowed on cloth models this season. Spectacular effects are attained by positioning fur in unique ways upon sleeve and for generous collars and for unusual hemline trimmings. The novelty of fur placement together with the showiness of the fur itself is emphasized throughout cloak styling.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

THE STAGE

Thinking back for the origin of any theatrical performance, our minds naturally revert first to Shakespeare and his Globe theatre. Some of us would go back a little farther, and many of us would choose Moliere—the plays he wrote and staged, often in the open, for the mad Louis, and then, in his own theatre, where, for a while, he was the rage of France.

But these were only steps in the evolution of the theatre and the play. For the origin of all dramatic representation, we must go back to the days of idol worship when many gods were thought to rule the destinies of man.

Two brothers, Danaus and Egyptus, sons of Belus, shared the throne of Egypt. After a particularly heated quarrel, Danaus, with his followers, set sail in search of a new land where he could rule alone. They landed near the Greek city of Argus, of which he shortly became king.

Here, to celebrate his good fortune, he instituted festivals in honor of the god Bacchus, who was supposed to have helped make his undertaking successful. These festivals consisted of nothing more than riotous revelry, interspersed with songs, which, after the manner of the day, were primitive and often coarse.

But the festivals soon became very popular and were held periodically all over Greece. From this beginning, in the form of a kind of public worship, which was the first entertainment or performance known, evolved the theatrical projects of later ages which developed into the institution of the theatre as we know it today.

"Why?"

"Because he represents Right and you represent Might."

"That's plain speaking, John."

"You asked for it."

"All this is quite complimentary to me," said Mansfield, dryly. "Then you advise me to throw up my hands? John, my position is impregnable."

"On the money side, yes. Man, there's a great thing under your hand. Make a clean breast of it to that girl."

Mansfield drew his palm across his forehead. "First, I've got to find out where Cathewe got his four hundred thousand. Did you know that he had that amount in the local banks?"

"No."

"Do you accept him in your house as an equal?"

"Assuredly!"

"By George, that fellow has hypnotized you!"

"Not noticeably."

"So you have written down your boyhood friend as a rogue!"

"I won't answer that. I'll abide by what you have written down yourself" —shrewdly.

Mansfield laughed. "I'll travel on my own. But you won't find anything you'd call mean in the deal. I can promise you that. But one of us must break."

"I'm on the boy's side, Dunleigh," replied Maddox, getting up. "But I'll repeat my advice: Call up Cathewe; give him what he wants." Then the doctor left.

That night as he sat before the fire in the library, his office hours over, his pipe going comfortably, Nancy walked over and sat down in his lap, took the pipe from his teeth and laid it on the ash tray. Then she seized his ears and drew his head right about face.

"Father Maddox, who is Digby Hallowell?"

His start nearly upset her. "Where did you hear that name?"

"From you."

"From me? But that's impossible!"

"Don't you know that you have lately acquired the habit of muttering out loud when you are overtired? Half a dozen times I have heard you mutter that name as if it were some tremendous thing."

"Nancy," he said gravely, "you will do father a great favor if you will forget you ever heard me utter it. I feel, by uttering that name aloud, even unconsciously, that I have broken my faith as a physician.

* * * * * * *

When the advertising men of the various shops penitently entered the business office of the Herald the next morning, asking to renew their contracts, the business manager called up Cathewe, who had an extension telephone at the side of his bed. Drowsily Cathewe caught the first few words, then he became wide awake.

"All of them?"

"Yes, sir. They want their spaces back tomorrow."

"The old contracts are dead."

"I've got new ones all ready, with the cash line blank. Do you want to come down, or shall I handle it?"

"I'll leave it to you. But listen carefully. The Herald has gained twenty thousand since those chaps deserted us. Add twenty per cent to the old scale."

"Wouldn't it be better to soak them with the January renewal?"

"You don't understand the big thing that's happened. Those fellows are not in the office because they are sorry for us. They are up against a wall, and we're the only way out. Twenty per cent and a year's run. When a man offers you a Corona, you don't ask for a stogie. Those are the terms. They can take them or leave them. Call me up when they go." Cathewe propped himself with his pillows and stared at the telephone for a full half hour; and when the telephone finally rang, again, the hair on his forehead was damp. "Well?" he said.

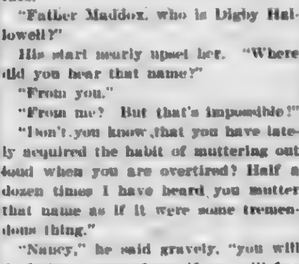
"Not a whimper. One year, with a twenty per cent raise, and they seemed glad to sign. In a couple of months—if the print-paper holds out—we'll be carrying money to the banks."

"I'll be with you at four."

Cathewe set the telephone down with a bang, kicked the bedclothes high into the air, turned a somersault and landed with a thud on the floor. He picked himself up, laughing, flung his bathrobe across his shoulders, and dashed down the hall to the bathroom. It was only after nine, but that did not matter.

"I've won, mother," he said, as he came storming into the dining room, his eyes glistening and his fine skin ruddy.

"Think of it! The most puzzling, tantalizing, quicksilvery thing on earth—the public—went out and won this fight for me because they saw I was playing fair!



"Queer sheep that they are, they would turn against me tomorrow, if they knew! Mother, I'm being watched. I can't prove it, but I sense it continually. Mansfield has just received a bitter blow to his prestige. He's not going to leave any stone unturned to do me injury."

At the Institute for the Deaf in St. Louis, Missouri, radio is now being used in the instruction of the pupils. The apparatus used is a large cabinet which contains radio amplifying apparatus large enough to attach a number of head phones at the same time. Several children are given the test together. The hearing is made possible, of course, by vibration, and the sounds must be repeated again and again to achieve results. The use of the radio in this way is so new that it is not possible to tell how much it is going to mean, but it is certain that it is a big step forward in the methods used in teaching the deaf.

WHEN are YOU going to make arrangements for that most sacred plot? While it is not well to emphasize the mortality of life, would it not be a source of comfort to yourself and family to make provision for the FUTURE?

IT should always be kept in mind that no matter what amount of wealth one may accumulate on this earth, the only possession they will retain after death is the burial plot or crypt in which their remains will be placed.

PROCRASTINATION is a thief of time and if you procrastinate you will rob yourself and family of the comfort and satisfaction experienced by the family who, in calmness and deliberation, determine their final resting place.

FRIENDLY HOST TO THE PUBLIC

Splendid Food at Reasonable Prices Accounts for the Increasing Popularity of King's Koffee Shoppe at 52 South Third Street. Social Feature Also Proves Attraction.

(C) by JACK PHILLIPS

In every line of business in every city there are always to be found establishments that attain a position of leadership in their particular line, and among such places in Columbus, King's Koffee Shoppe is a noteworthy example. Equipped with the finest furnishings, using only the best foodstuffs the market affords and rendering a most metropolitan service, King's represents that class of restaurant that is steadily increasing the habit of dining out among people in all walks of life.

Cleanliness is one of the outstanding features of this restaurant, and it is not confined to the tables and silverware that are always noticed by everyone, but extends to the kitchen and other places that are seldom frequented by the public.

As a good place to eat, King's Koffee Shoppe ranks with the best. Not only its regular patrons, but travelers and tourists often comment upon the high quality of food that is served, the excellence of the service and the fairness of the prices. Conducted upon the idea that a pleased customer is its most valuable business asset, the establishment has grown in popularity until today few restaurants in this city enjoy so large a patronage, or are better or more favorably known.

The menu here always offers a wide variety of good things to eat, and whether your order be for simply a cup of coffee or a chicken dinner you are made to feel that your patronage is desired and appreciated. In fact, the courtesy and consideration that is invariably accorded its friends and patrons is well-known. Undoubtedly, this will explain why one so often hears people say, "Meet me at King's." They know that an atmosphere of friendliness adds not a little to the enjoyments of eating.

The management of the restaurant is in the hands of Messrs. C. E. Fisher and P. Sebastian. Both were formerly with the Hotel Deshler. They have a wide and varied experience in this business and are restauranteurs of first rank when it comes to furnishing the public really good things to eat without extravagant prices. Indeed many patrons of the place have said that they often find it more economical to eat here than at home.

In these days, public opinion demands cleanliness, service and pure food at moderate prices. King's Koffee Shoppe by measuring up to this standard is rendering a public service, and in a manner that is ever-broadening its circle of friends and patrons.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

OPALS

The superstition with regard to the opal—that it is an unlucky gem—appears to be of northern origin. In the East the opal has always been regarded as rather a lucky stone. But in Norse mythology we find the probable genesis of the superstition common among English-speaking people today. In the "Edda," that famous collection of Scandinavian mythology, it is stated that Volcnr, the Scandinavian vulcan, fashioned out of the eyes of children a gem called yarkstein in which was, apparently, the opal. And it was a common belief in the Middle ages that by looking into the pupil of the eye the figure of a boy or a girl could be seen.

This early connection between the eye and the opal persisted down to the time of Queen Elizabeth and doubtless owed something to the physical resemblance between the white of the eye and a very "milky" opal. In Elizabeth's reign Doctor Batman writes, "The optallius (opal) keepeth and saveth the eye of him that bear it and dimmeth other men's eyes so that it in a manner maketh them blind, so they they may not see what is done before them, so that it is said to be the patron of thieves." This is clearly a variant of the evil eye superstition, the opal being the eye; and taken in connection with the gruesome custom of Volcnr recorded in the Edda sufficiently explains the inherited, intuitive distrust with which the superstitions regard the opal today.

HILLTOP PARTY BIG SUCCESS

Thousands Throng Streets and Make Merry Hallowe'en Night.

An ideal night and people filled with the spirit of the season was the combination which last Monday night put across the biggest time the Hilltop has ever seen in a Hallowe'en celebration.

Thousands from all parts of the city and the surrounding country thronged the streets of the Hilltop and made merry the whole evening long. Revelers, both young and old, some dressed in the most grotesque costumes imaginable, others in costumes which showed much time and thought, vied with each other in an attempt to create the most fun.

The parade made up of the revelers, formed at Whitethorne avenue and West Broad street at 7:30 and, led by a band of 15 pieces, marched west in Broad street to Hunts avenue, where the judges reviewed the parade and awarded the prizes.

Perhaps the most inconsistent thing in the parade was when a Republican candidate for city council came along in the parade, seated on a Democratic mule. However, as the office is supposed to be non-partisan, it was a fitting combination under the circumstances.

The people of the Hilltop are to be congratulated for the orderly manner in which they conducted themselves during the evening, and the fact has been much commented on during the past few days.

The Hilltop Business Men's Association, the organization sponsoring the party, wish to extend to the people at large, their appreciation of the excellent manner in which they conducted themselves.

Another body of men whom we are apt to take as a matter of course at an event of this kind, but nevertheless deserving of much praise, are the policemen, who so ably assisted the committee in raging for the crowds and helping the revelers in the automobile traffic. To Chief French and the men detailed in this work, the committee wishes, through these columns, to extend their utmost appreciation.

Here's hoping with the assistance of the weatherman, we may enjoy a party next year equally as good.

POLAR BEARS DOWN COWBOYS

West Team Scores 12 Points On Strong North Eleven; At Athens Saturday.

West High proved to be trouble makers for the Polar Bears in the new North High stadium last Friday afternoon. The Cowboys played good football and shaved 12 points on the North team. But even this was not enough for victory for the North eleven was successful after a hard fought battle in stacking up 25 points.

The game Friday was the best showing the Cowboys have made this season. It was also the third straight defeat West has been handed this season but was no much of an improvement over their other games that it is noticeable.

West scored in the third and fourth quarters, Muder and Trabue carried the ball for the touchdowns. North scored on long runs and breaks through the West line. But one pass attack proved to be any good.

West will play at Athens on Saturday, Nov. 5.

Hauntz, Green and Randall Up for City Election on Tuesday.

Over 40,000 people will go to the polls on Tuesday to cast their votes for members of the city council, mayor, judges and bond issues and levies.

The Hilltop should be especially interested in this election from the fact that three men from here are in the race. Ray G. Hauntz, 34, 44 Binns Boulevard, and Floyd F. Green, 3046 Crescent Drive are seeking seats in city council, while Cecil J. Randall, 1959 West Broad St., is seeking re-election to the board of education. All three men are Republicans.

Mr. Hauntz is an active grocer of the Hilltop and has been a resident of this section of the city since 1913. He has in the past been an active member of Hilltop civic organizations and a booster for all public betterment. He is a member of the West Side Board of Trade and the Hilltop Business Men's Association, Westgate Lodge of Masons, Dokkies and K. of P. He is president of the Columbus Retail Grocers Association and active in the state and national associations. Mr. Hauntz promises a business like administration for his part while in council if elected and a fair deal to all.

Mr. Green who is at present employed by a firm in Dayton has been a citizen of the [illegible] for the past nine years. He is an officer of the Eastgate Lodge, F. & A. M., Achiar Grotto, Builders Exchange and Eleventh Ward Republican Club.

Mr. Randall, who is at present time president of the board of education has been a resident of the Hilltop for a number of years. His record in the present office he holds is very much in favor of his re-election to the board. During his term an extensive building campaign has been carried on in the public school system of Columbus. The Hilltop has profited much from this building program. While Mr. Randall has been in office the new West High school has been started, an addition has been made to West [illegible] and a [illegible] addition is now under way at John Burroughs school which when completed will make it probably the largest elementary school in the city, and an addition to old West High school has been made. He has also been active in the completion of Central, North and South High schools, McGuffey elementary and McKinley Junior High schools.

Don't Burn Leaves!

Don't burn leaves in the street!

This warning comes from city health officials. It was pointed out that it is a nuisance and injurious to health, that it is a fire hazard and is injurious to the paving.

City health officials have suggested that the leaves be placed in gardens or flower beds as fertilizer.

Members of the department said that prosecution of the practice under the ordinance providing a fine for violators will be made if it should continue.

The H. U. B. class of the Hiltonia U. B. Sunday school gave a Hallowe'en masquerade party, Monday night, Oct. 31, attended by all the witches and ghosts and bats which fly abroad on that night. Merriment was both spontaneous and contagious, and at the stroke of 12, the guests departed with a disappointed feeling that the night of all nights was over. Everyone had a jolly time.

TOURIST TRAFFIC TURNS SOUTH WITH FALL MONTHS

"Go South, young man, go South."

This is the cry of the tourists as the winter months approach and now the number of visitors to our local camp begins to dwindle. Whereas the earlier months found as high as thirty camps at a night in the Glenwood park tourist camp, the number for one of the best days of this week was but twelve.

Just out of curiosity I stopped at the camp on Monday and chatted awhile with one of the new arrivals. He gave his home town as Dayton and his business as a retired physician. Along with another old gal he was on his way to New York and then south for the winter. He talked as thus: "I get more enjoyment out of this life of travelling than can be imagined and I continue it the year around. I've seen nearly every tourist camp in the country and have been a guest at them all. Probably the best one I have seen was at Niagara Falls. There they have every facility a person could want. They even have baths and washing machines at your disposal.

"I always have thought a great deal of Columbus and every other tourist over the country will comment on the beauty of this city but they will all tell you what a poor tourist camp you have. It is a drawback to such a fine city in this age of tourists. The prospects for an ideal camp are good here but you must have lots of improvements to make it keep up with the pace the rest of the city is setting. Why it was only a few weeks ago that you didn't even have good drinking water here. I see you do have that though."

"Well I'm go on over here and see what someone else thinks of conditions here," I said.

"It's no use," he answered, "they will tell you the same."

And they did!

VITAL ISSUES IN COMING ELECTION

"There is a tide in the affairs of men, which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune: omitted, all the voyage of their life is bound in shallows and in miseries."

Once to every man comes some chance to help or aid in the betterment of humanity. Such an opportunity now presents itself. Two vitally important issues are before the voting public for their approval in the election to be held on Nov. 8.

It is very necessary that the best men be selected to fill the vacant offices and utmost discretion should be used in these matters but at the same time there are other issues to be voted upon that require but very little energy of thought to settle in the proper manner. These two important issues are the three mill school levy and the 1-3 mill police and firemen's levy.

By voting for these levies the citizens of our city are making it possible to carry on the work of probably the three greatest factors in our public life today. There are at all times three great guards standing on duty in the city life in America today. They are the policeman, the fireman, and education. All are very necessary but are not always duly rewarded. In the case of the fireman and the policeman this fact is evident through the small wage paid to those who risk their lives for our safety. In the instance of education it is apt to be neglected if the present 2.4 mill levy is not renewed by the 3 mill levy that is proposed.

The 3 mill levy will provide for approximately $1,800,000 per year as running expenses for the public schools. This will pay the salaries of 1450 teachers and principals, 250 janitors and engineers, furnish repairs, supplies and fuel for 77 school buildings which house the 42,000 school children of this city. This provides for an annual increase of 1400 pupils.

What will happen if the issue fails to be approved by the voters? This very important question will be answered in the year 1928, when the present levy expires, by the enforcement of a part-time schedule for all the schools or a shortening of the school term to six months. Every person who has the interest of their children and the interest of the community at heart will be sure to respond to this worthy cause which costs so little.

There is but little money to be said for the police and firemen levy except that it is for a worthy cause. There can be no mistaken ideas when this case is thoroughly investigated. The firemen and policemen are being underpaid and the small increase that the 1-3 mill levy will provide will be placed to good use.

Are there any reasons why these two issues should not meet with approval? Can we fail to point with pride to our fire and police departments and our public school system and say "A bigger and better Columbus."

Funds for the proposed aviation field, market house and Third street viaduct bond issues should be weighed very carefully and considered from the standpoint of the whole city and not from any one section.

This paper was pleased last week to print in our editorial columns an estimate of Ray O. Haunts, who is one of eight candidates for council—soon to be elected.

Our estimate of this representative Hilltop man comes from our knowledge of him. We have watched him grow up. We know he is industrious—his neighbors and customers know he is honest and fair in his dealings with his fellowmen.

That he is a fine type of American citizen is attested by his personal life—"clean as a hound's tooth."

That he enjoys his neighbors is borne out by his home; by his business; by his participancy in its social affairs. His interest in school and church life is evident to all of us.

CITY SERVANTS ARE COURTEOUS

Police and Firemen Deserving of Increase in Salary.

"The day of the roughneck policeman is past. He has been supplanted by the officer whose every thought is dominated by courtesy."

These are the words of Judge Harry B. Holmes of municipal court who is taking an active part in the campaign being waged by police and firemen for a $25 monthly salary increase. The proposal will be put up to the people on the November ballot in the form of a one-third mill levy.

Judge Holmes is speaking on the historical prejudice against police existing in the minds of many and the need of changing that opinion. The first rule of the policeman today, he points out, is the rule of courtesy.

"There was a time," the magistrate says, "when the policeman was styled 'a bogie man' by parents desirous of frightening their children into good behavior. They would tell the children they would call a policeman if they didn't behave. But today this has all changed. Children are not afraid of the neat blue uniform, brass buttons and badge of authority. Notice the traffic officers assisting the children across the street at school houses. They are looked upon as friends to the kids."

After the rule of courtesy, Judge Holmes says, the rule of education follows. One of the most important subjects for officers' study is the law of evidence, he declares. In the past police have frequently been regarded as persecutors, whereas their first duty when an arrest is made is merely to present the proper kind of evidence.

Chief of Police Harry E. French declares every member of the department has realized and is conforming to these rules of improvement. But it is harder to educate a policeman on a maximum wage of $160 a month, he adds, when so many other police departments of equal or even less the size of ours boast of a higher wage scale.

Our men of the fire and police organizations are conducting a clean campaign, working night and day. The expense was readily furnished from their own pockets.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS
By H. IRVING KING

CAULS

"The superstition with regard to the caul—the membrane which sometimes envelops a child's head at birth—is by no means extinct. It is still by many supposed to indicate good fortune for the child so born and by many to be an infallible charm against drowning, for the person who can get possession of one and wears it about him. Now and then cauls are advertised for sale. What their market price is now is uncertain; but it is said that "In the seventeenth century sailors used to pay from $50 to $100 for one."

"I was born with a caul," says Dickens in the beginning of "David Copperfield," and relates how his caul was purchased by an old lady in the neighborhood whom it preserved from death by drowning; the fact that she never in her life ventured on the water being merely incidental.

The caul superstition can be clearly traced back into remote history. It is a survival of the worship of the Egyptian goddess Isis—the caul is the "Veil of Isis." The word itself is a form of the old Gaelic "call," a veil. Just why Isis should have had an especial connection with the water and those who ventured upon it is a trifle hazy; but there is no doubt that she did and a ship was carried in the procession in her honor.

It is rather remarkable how often, in investigating modern superstitions, we run across traces of Isis-worship: it is a reminder of the persistency with which her cult introduced itself into Grecian and Roman communities in spite of the opposition of priests and lawgivers.

SOMETHING GOOD

We are growing to appreciate more and more the value of vegetables of all kinds in our diet. We learn that we should serve at least one green vegetable daily to our families, and more is better.

Vegetable Tamale Loaf.

Chop and brown one-fourth of a pound of salt pork with one onion or with a clove of garlic finely minced. Add one quart of tomatoes, a can of corn or hominy, one tablespoonful of chili powder, three tablespoonfuls of oil, one tablespoonful each of butter and salt. Heat to the boiling point, then add one and one-fourth cupfuls of milk and one and one-half cupfuls of yellow corn meal, cook ten minutes, stirring constantly. Remove from the fire, add three well-beaten eggs, one cupful each of minced ripe olives and seedless raisins. Bake one hour.

Steak and Peppers.

Spread over a round steak the following mixture: A cupful of bread crumbs, one small onion, one cupful each of fresh tomato and green peppers chopped. Season with salt, cayenne pepper and a bit of poultry dressing. Roll up and tie and pour over a little tomato juice. Cover tightly and cook slowly for three hours. Add more tomato juice, basting the meat occasionally. Use suet while cooking or butter to give flavor if the steak lacks fat.

Apricot Jelly.

Take one pound of dried apricots, wash and cover with cold water, let them soak overnight. Cook with one cupful of sugar in the same water in which they were soaked. Strain through a fine sieve. While hot add two tablespoonfuls of gelatin which has been softened in cold water. Mold and when chilled serve with whipped cream. Sherbet is delicious made from apricots; add water and a bit of lemon juice and freeze.

Stuffed Peppers With Beef.

Parboil six green peppers for five minutes, then stuff with a mixture of cooked rice, rare roast beef or steak seasoned and chopped and moistened with brown sauce or soup stock. Cover the peppers with buttered crumbs, place in a baking pan and baste with broth while baking. Serve with brown sauce.

Almond Soup.

Blanch, chop and pound two-thirds of a cupful of almonds in a mortar. Add gradually four tablespoonfuls of water and one-eighth of a teaspoonful of salt, then add three cupfuls of stock, chicken or veal, one small sliced onion, three stalks of celery, let simmer one hour, rub through a sieve. Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter and the same of flour, then pour on gradually the hot liquor; add a pint of scalded milk, one cupful of cream and salt and pepper to taste. Serve with croutons.

FLOYD GREEN FOR COUNCIL

The thing that makes a community worth while is the spirit of its citizens. The West Side is a community of thrifty, home-owning and home-loving citizens who are not only interested in the welfare and development of the West Side but are keenly interested in the progress of our entire "GOOD OLD COLUMBUS TOWN." In making the tax dollar yield a dollar's worth of service to the taxpayer it is imperative that on Nov. 8th we go to the polls and select four men to serve as our councilmen for the next four years, who have courage, stamina and business ability, men who do not have a selfish sectional interest in view but can co-operate with the other members of council in securing the many things which our West Side needs, especially sewers and a street car extension west of Hague avenue.

I have been a property owner of the Hilltop for ten years and have been deeply interested in the welfare and development of this section and I want to assure my fellow West Siders that if elected I will serve them in an efficient, honest and upright manner, with my home and office always ready to welcome you, on any and all civic matters.

Floyd Green.

"Trade Your Smiles."

Scallops and Eton Jacket Achieve a Youthful Styling

Fashion prescribes "youthful black" for the young modern. If you happen to be skeptical about the youthfulness of black, the girlish costume in the picture is sure to dispel all doubts on the subject. This "ducky" little ensemble so prettily posed by Laura La Plante of screen fame, is black from crown to toe, and that means pumps of black velvet, hat of black felt playing accompaniment to an adorable short-jacket suit of black kitten's-ear broadcloth.

Of course every young girl will be wanting a pair of black velvet pumps just like Miss La Plante is wearing, for black velvet footwear is one of the very chic items for autumn.

As to this cunning two-piece dress, for one thing it bespeaks the continued favor of scallops as trimming. And have you noticed the raised waistline accented the more because of the "tucked-in" blouse? Slenderized youth is rejoicing at the trend toward higher waistlines, while "stylish stouts" are hoping against hope that Madame Mode will "have a heart" when it comes to introducing this new silhouette.

As to the feminized soft lines which fashion so persistently demands this season, this little suit achieves just that, in direct contrast to the mannish tailored jacket and skirt of yesteryear.

It is a question as to which most successfully courts favor with the young girl for her two-piece suit—velvet or suede finish cloth. Both materials are very popular. Some of the "best dressers" in the younger set are choosing the new "velvety" kitten's-ear broadcloth, just to be "different" from the majority.

Concerning the nobby eton jacket, it is as modish as ever, and more so for youth.

Nebraska has a new plague to contend with, which has never before been heard of. It has arrived in the form of long-eared, stubborn little burros, which, having been supplanted by the light automobile, have been turned loose by many prospectors, and live in the hills and mountains. Driven down from their homes by the snow and cold, they often sweep down on small towns, invading the streets in a fearless manner. Occasionally a troop will surround a farm and devour everything in sight, including the family laundry hanging on the line. They bray noisily, and are not at all afraid of men, but whirl on a persuer with flashing teeth or flying heels.

Pavements With Two-Sided Value

FIRST a generation of trouble-free service from one side of the brick, then relaying the same brick "bottom side up" on a renewed base for another quarter-century of resistance to traffic—that's just one of the reasons why vitrified paving brick, asphalt-filled, makes the most economical pavement a community can select.

The Man with Three Names

by Harold MacGrath

COPYRIGHT BY THE BELL SYNDICATE INC.

He ate his breakfast hurriedly, then bolted into the study. For a little while she could hear him humming some bars from the "Second Polonaise"; then silence. Thereafter she and the maid moved about their work without sound. He wrote steadily until three, on his book; then he went to the office. He worked hard, arranged a new advertising schedule with his business manager and left the office at five o'clock. It was growing dark. He always walked home, even in bad weather.

It was dark, but still a little too early for the street lamps. The darkness was partly due to the heavy raineloods that were sweeping across the sky. Obliquely he saw two men across the street apparently talking to a woman. What made him turn his head and look squarely, he never knew. Ordinarily, he would have continued on. This single look was enough. He broke into a run. When he arrived he did not ask questions. He knocked one of the men flat and whirled the other into the gutter.

"Can I be of assistance?" he said, turning to the woman. Then he saw who it was. "Miss Mansfield! What in the world are you doing alone in this quarter of the town? Here, take my arm. I'll call a taxi and you can have a cup of tea while you wait."

"If you please! I . . . I'm rather upset. One of them touched me!" Cathewe stopped. "No, no! Please do not go back. My chauffeur must have misunderstood my directions, for I left him by the curb here."

"I'm so glad I happened along."

"So am I."

And they started on, but neither could think of anything else to say.

"Here we are," he said, when they at last reached the house.

"Is that you, sonny?"

What a pleasant voice thought the girl, her astonishment at full tide.

"Yes, mother. Will you ring for lights and tea? I have company—Miss Mansfield, whose chauffeur misunderstood her instructions."

The girl heard a flurry of skirts in the room beyond, the tinkle of a bell, and then in a kind of dream Betty entered the living-room.

"Can you see the lounge?" he asked.

"Yes."

Almost at once the maid came in with a Roman candelabrum, which she placed on the piano.

"You'll excuse me a moment," said Cathewe, while I call a taxi"; and he stepped into the hall.

Mrs. Cathewe sat down again and played Greig's "Papillon," played it without taking her gaze off this flower-like young woman; and Betty felt powerless to shift her eyes. She had entered an enchanted castle, and the mystic inhabitants had laid a spell upon her. She was not conscious of moving. Did she drink a cup of tea? She could not remember. She recollected nothing until the door of the taxicab slammed behind her.

Betty peered from the side window, and received a distinct shock. Why, this Ali Baba's cave was almost opposite Nancy's! Nancy knew them She must know them!

The moment she arrived home she was astonished to note that it was seven. She had been in that quaint house almost two hours. She ran to the telephone and called a number.

"Dr. Maddox, please." She had to wait a minute.

"Hello!"

"This is Betty Mansfield, doctor. I've a question to ask. Who lives in that little white house across the street from you, the house with the picket fence?"

"There are four or five white houses across the street."

"Thanks!" With an indignant gesture she set the receiver on the hook.

Cathewe usually remained at his desk until the paper was ready for the press, which was about three o'clock in the morning. But tonight at twelve he turned the office over to the night editor. He wanted to get out of doors, walk. His head was full of the girl. He could not dismiss the vivid picture of her.

Cathewe's long stride carried him to his own gate. He was in the act of opening it when a pistol shot cut through the silence sharply.

CHAPTER VI

Longing.

Cathewe broke into a run toward the rear of the house. He saw a man dash from the kitchen and make for the back-fence. There was no way of cutting him off, but there was a chance of putting a hand on him before he could scale the high board fence. Cathewe touched the man's coat tail, but futilely.

"Mother?" he called, thundering through the kitchen into the dining room. "Mother?"

"Yes, sonny! I'm all right," came from his study. "I fired only to frighten him. He was rifling your safe. Was there anything of value there?"

"Only odds and ends of manuscripts and my dramatic contracts. This is Mansfield. That money in the bank is bothering him. He begins to feel that he must find out. But I must go to New York tomorrow night, even if I'm followed."

"There goes the bell!" exclaimed Mrs. Cathewe.

"Probably the patrolman."

It was. Cathewe offered him a cup of coffee, and the three of them sat around the kitchen table, discussing the affair.

Then Mrs. Cathewe described the man minutely.

"I'd let the matter drop," the patrolman said suddenly.

"Clary, which are you for?" Cathewe demanded.

"What do you mean?"

"Are you for Mansfield or for Bannister?"

"Bannister, Mr. Cathewe. But for all that, my job is my bread and butter. You know the department as well as I do. You're up against a real war. You'll never get anything on Mansfield that'll hold water in court."

Cathewe let the matter drop, and the policeman left.

At precisely this moment the telephone rang in Mansfield's library. Mansfield laid aside his book.

"Hello!"

"This Mr. Mansfield?"

"Yes."

"There wasn't anything."

Mansfield hung up the receiver, but he did not reach for the book he had been reading. Instead, he stared into space.

He was thinking and thinking hard. The truth is, he was trying to fight his way through the gossamer net Betty had thrown about him. He sensed with panic that the fiber which had made him a power in the land was softening.

Again, his imagination took another turn. He seemed to be walking in a valley of echoes. "Give Betty what she wants." "Give me what I want." "Give Cathewe what he wants." "Give."

The thought of Cathewe, however, always had the effect of a tonic upon a man at low ebb. To crush this meddling whippersnapper, break him and scatter him like dust.

The sum of all those psychological incursions and cogitations was this: Mansfield was giving Betty what she wanted, giving it to her because he loved her and because another phrase of Maddox was of recurrent quality.

"If you deceive her, and she finds it out, you will lose her."

But the truth must be kept from her. She must never know that her father was not the demigod she painted him. Of such is the miracle of love.

As for Betty, she felt herself confronted by a singular fact. She was being covertly snubbed; Nancy was snubbing her, the doctor was snubbing her, and others, too. Possessing a healthy pride, Betty dropped the idea of finding out what she craved to know. But she could not dismiss that remarkable pair from her thoughts. Again and again there came an almost irresistable longing to drive into that quiet street, stop at that door and ask for music.

It is supposable that one of the main reasons for the continuance of this odd situation was that Betty was lonely. Her hours were frequently crowded with action; still she was lonely for the companionships such as she had known in France.

Mansfield still kept three or four saddle horses, and frequently now they rode into the country in the early morning. He would never forget one brilliant, frosty morning. They had dismounted at the top of the mill where she had met Cathewe. The brown earth and the ruby boscage and the flashing blue water of the lake evoked in her desire to sing.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

IN ANOTHER'S PLACE

When in a moment of excitement or envy you incline to assail another's good name, or question his or her acts which seem to you unreasonable, hold your tongue.

A mischievous word hastily spoken is like a little spark, capable of causing a great conflagration, irreparable loss and unspeakable sorrow.

To blurt out the first cruel thought that comes to your mind in a burst of sudden heat is a fearful thing to do.

It is an evidence of an inherit weakness in the moral fiber and proves your unfitness for leadership.

At one outburst of temper if you should happen to be seen or overheard by your employers, you shatter your own good record and spoil a perfectly bright future, simply by giving vent to spleen.

When the impulse comes to malign co-workers or speak ill of superiors, however much you may wish to override them, hold your horses and drive carefully.

There is danger ahead.

Thousands have gone over the fatal precipice for similar recklessness, when they imagined themselves secure.

Put yourself in the place of the person whom you are seeking to humiliate and overthrow. You know nothing about his or her trials, impediments, deprivations or sorrows, and you have no royal privilege to enter the heart-sanctuary and expose it to a vulgar gaze.

Put yourself in place of an overwrought typist who is doing her utmost to support aged parents; put yourself in the place of a troubled employer who lies awake nights from thinking of pressing obligations; put yourself in the place of the man that runs the elevator, the scrub woman with her bent body and gnarled purple hands.

To seek to exalt yourself by contrast with such people, for no other reason than petty pride or jealousy is not only exceedingly discourteous but grossly uncharitable.

Don't hand out sighs and tears while you can scatter smiles and sunshine.

It is an understood thing in the game of life that while the hot-headed and uncharitable are pulling down reputations of others, the person who puts himself in the place of the striving, who is considerate and kindly in words and acts, yet is awake to his own opportunity, is the individual who eventually rises to eminence and remains there.

SUNSTORMS

How can one, who is bewildered and appalled by the fury of our planet's cyclones and volcanic eruptions, form a conception of the terrible energy of natural operations on the sun? Newcomb suggested that if we call the solar chromosphere an ocean of fire we must remember that it is an ocean indefinitely hotter than the fiercest furnace and as deep as the Atlantic is broad. If we call it movements hurricanes we must remember that our hurricanes blow only about 100 miles an hour, while those of the chromosphere blow as far in a single second.

There are such hurrcanes as, coming down from the North, would, in 30 seconds after they had crossed the St. Lawrence river, be in the gulf of Mexico, carrying with them the whole surface of the continent in a mass not simply of ruinn, but of glowing vapor.

The American Railways Association has announced that as a further step in their program of economy in operation, new specifications have been approved providing for the lengthening of rails to thirty-nine feet. This means an increase of six feet over the length of the rails now in use, although the weight per yard will remain approximately the same. This step will reduce expenditures for bolts and nuts, as there will be fewer rail joints. It will also make for smoother traveling, for longer rails, and the fewer the rail joints, the more easily the cars will ride.

Upholstering

Upholstering, as we conceive it, is a fine art, combining the expert workmanship of the artisan and the sensitive appreciation of the artist. We strive to help our customers.

The Sandman Story

By Martha Martin

ABOUT THE WALRUS

"We'll tell of our ways," said Mother Walrus. "Yes, we'll let them know about us."

Billie Brownie was wearing his warm, warm coat which Old Man Winter had given him. It was made out of the same material that Old Man Winter had his wardrobe made of, for no matter how cold it is, it is never too cold for Old Man Winter.

He is protected from the cold by his regular winter clothing! But he won't tell anyone just how it is made.

And Billie was wearing the shoes and the cap and the earmuffs Old Man Winter had given him, too.

"There are many of us about, as you can see," said Mother Walrus.

"Ah, Mr. Walrus Isn't One of Your Skinny Gentlemen."

"But, though we love to go about in big groups, we have a nice family life and are devoted to our own.

"We are great, huge creatures, aren't we?"

"Enormous," said Billie Brownie.

"If it wouldn't be rude," he added, after a moment, "I would like to know how much you weigh."

"Not rude at all, Billie Brownie," said Mother Walrus. "Not rude at all. Now my Mr. Walrus is one of the grandest and most superb of creatures.

"He's a Walrus after my own heart and, of course, why wouldn't he be?"

Mother Walrus laughed a great, deep laugh.

"Of course, "she repeated, "why wouldn't he be, considering he is the Walrus of my own heart?

"He weighs three thousand pounds, and I weigh two thousand pounds.

"Ah, Mr. Walrus isn't one of your skinny gentlemen. No, he is fat, good and fat, and full of wrinkles, for the fat all wrinkles up, as there is so much of it.

"There is plenty of fat to spare, you see, and it just folds up and wrinkles up and lets you know that there is nothing stingy about the fatness—it's all there—plenty of it!

"His two ivory tusks are the most beautiful I have ever seen.

"We are slow creatures when we go over the ice, but we're good swimmers."

"Gracious," said Billie Brownie. "To think of weighing three thousand pounds."

"It's a majestic thought, isn't it?" said Mother Walrus, with a Walrus smile.

"Ah, yes," she continued, "we're not small or dainty. We go in for size and little else.

"We have so much fat that there isn't much room for brains. We're not very bright. In fact, we might almost be considered stupid.

"But we're as sociable as sociable can be, and we're all very friendly with one another.

"And, as I said before, though we are so friendly with one another, our own family always comes first.

"I'm not much of a fighter. I will do no one any harm.

"But—if any one should come after my baby—then, it is very different! I shold be so excited then, to protect my big little one, that I'd be afraid of no one and I'd fight, fight, fight.

"The Mother Walruses will fight for their young. They are afraid of nothing, nothing, nothing if their young are in danger.

"Such are the ways of the Walrus creatures," ended Mother Walrus, as she bellowed a good-bye to Billie Brownie.

When a man in Sierra Leone, West Africa, dies of snake bite, or of other animal injury, his family is usually fined; for such a death is considered shameful. The people think that the man should have known enough to take better care of himself.

A report from the American Association for Medical Progress states that last year the United States reported more cases of smallpox than any other country except Asia. There were 23,752 cases distributed over forty-six states and the District of Columbia, only Rhode Island and Vermont being entirely free. Ten European countries had no smallpox in 1926, while eighteen together reported 1000 cases: Russia, Spain, England and Wales were in the lead in Europe. It is thought that much of the smallpox in this country could be prevented if proper precautions were taken. The disease is most prevalent where antivaccine sentiment is the strongest.

The Indians can no longer be spoken of as a "vanishing race." According to Edgar B. Merritt, Assistant Commissioner of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the present number of American Indians is 350,000, and their population is steadily increasing.

"Trade Your Smiles."

Beautiful Shaw-Nee Hills

The people of Columbus are beginning to realize that the drive from Gregg's dam to Belle Point on the banks of the Scioto is the most beautiful in the United States.

Visitors from all parts of the United States are making this statement. The plans for the widening and lighting this beautiful drive and lighting of the O'Shaughnessy dam itself, the beautification of the shores on both sides of the Scioto are the aims of the city as well as those who will own beautiful cottages and permanent homes along its shores. With its boats, canoes, motor boats and casing shells, its parks, zoos, bathing pools and fine fishing all will help to make this the most delightful recreational center of Ohio. A place the business man will delight to bring his guests and associates. He can leave his office early, stop at four beautiful golf courses, then give them this wonderful drive, a boat ride of twenty miles, entertain them at his cottage and if need be, be back to the city in thirty minutes.

Among those interested in this development is the Beamar Realty Co., who are spending huge sums in developing the west shore from O'Shaughnessy dam to Belle Point. The addition is called Shaw-Nee Hills, named after the Indians who inhabited this region. The main trail is called Shaw-Nee Trail and will wind for nine miles up the river. All drives leading to it are named after the Indians as Osages, Seminole, Wyandotte, Cherokee, Hiwatha, Seneca, Iroquois, etc.

There are trees in this addition as old as the Indians themselves that will make delightful shade for the tired fisherman or recreational centers for those who love to picnic. The West Side men who are associated with the Beamar Realty Co. are its sales agents, Mr. H. F. Jordan of 44 Maldy Ave., and Mr. J. W. Starr of 39 Clarendon Ave.

The salesmen are Mr. Harry O. Johnston, 2710 Palmetto Ave., William Waddington, 3083 W. Broad St., George Stara, 211 S. Princeton Ave., Neely Wilson, 156 Hawkes Ave., William Ewald, 937 W. Broad St.

Many West Side people have bought for cottages or invested in this addition and it is hoped many more will do so. Every courtesy will be extended by West side salesmen in charge.

Bus or Street Car?

BUS SERVICE MEANS:

1. Small investment and light taxes.
2. Additional burden on streets instead of helping to maintain them.
3. Limited liability for accidents.
4. Unreliable service in winter weather, dependent upon city clearing streets of snow.

STREET CAR SERVICE MEANS:

1. $26,000,000.00 of property in Columbus.
2. 2200 Columbus shareholders.
3. $953,000.00 taxes annually.
4. $3,600,000.00 annual payroll.
5. 2000 skilled employes.
6. $3,500,000.00 spent on Columbus streets in last five years.
7. Serves the whole city, not merely profitable part.
8. Does not wear out streets.
9. Clears its own tracks of snow and ice.
10. Subject to full measure of compensation for damages inflicted.

Delaware and Newark are typical examples of what happens to street car service when busses are permitted to take the cream of the business without assuming obligations imposed upon the street cars.

Perpetual Care

BE modern park or garden cemetery—an American idea of recent origin—has many advantages over the old graveyard, not only in appearance, but also in economy of maintenance. The uniform, perpetual care of each lot without annual charges, assessments or extras, is an important forward step in cemetery maintenance and has met with public approval wherever used.

MEMORIAL BURIAL PARK is the LARGEST and ONLY cemetery serving Columbus and Franklin County in which EVERY LOT is ASSURRED PERPETUAL MAINTENANCE, by taking a part of the purchase price of the lot to establish the PERPETUAL CARE FUND.

You are invited to investigate the Perpetual Care Method and easy ownership plan of purchase adopted by Memorial Burial Park before making your selection.

FORGET-ME-NOT DRIVE IS NOW ON

Three-Day Campaign to Raise Money for Families of Disabled War Veterans.

Yesterday, today and tomorrow are forget-me-not days in Columbus. A city-wide sale of forget-me-nots is being conducted by the wives of veterans and Ohio State university sorority girls for the benefit of the Columbus chapter of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War.

The sum of $3000 is the goal of this year's campaign announced Stanton M. Kahn, commander of the local chapter and chairman of the drive committee. The money will be used to help provide for the families of those veterans who were completely disabled in the late war. It will help to care for those who are unable to get emergency aid from the government.

A similar campaign is being staged by other chapters all over the country on these three days.

The Womans Home and Foreign Missionary society of Hoge Memorial church will have an all-day meeting Thursday, Nov. 17, beginning at 10 o'clock, at the home of Mrs. H. C. Hutchison. The morning will be devoted to the study book "The Adventure of the Church" with Mrs. Held, leader. A pot-luck luncheon will be served at noon and the regular business meeting in the afternoon. Mrs. Ray Cave will be assisting hostess. The women of the church are invited.

Husbands and members of the Sunset Literary club were entertained by the club Wednesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Seiller, 29 Eldon Ave. The music and social committee of the club had charge of the evening's entertainment, which consisted of an Armistice Day program.

A man coming up behind their car noticed a flame from the read end and called their attention to it. The Hilltop fire department was called and extinguished the blaze. The car was completely charred.

Investigation showed that the fire started from a gasoline leak from a gallon can which was carried in case of emergency. There was no insurance. Total loss amounted to $175.

WEST TO PLAY EAST FRIDAY

Cowboys Were Defeated 28-0 By Athens On Saturday Trip.

Two very much defeated teams will meet on the Central field this Friday when West high plays East high. Neither team has been able to win a game in the city high school league this year. West has been able to score 19 points during the season to 7 for East. The game this Friday promises to be very well matched and the Cowboys are holding hopes of carrying the easternites into camp by the neck.

West went down to defeat at the hands of Athens high when they journeyed to Athens last Saturday. The cowboys failed to score while the Athen's eleven took the ball over the line to the tune of 28 points. West tried a passing attack which proved to no avail although they were able to complete a great number of them. The outstanding play of the game for the Columbus team was the kick-off received by Wood who ran to Athen's 30-yard line only to be tripped by a West player.

Athens was unable to score more than once in the last quarter.

On Thursday, Nov. 3, Mrs. E. W. Lauer, 145 N. Hague Ave., entertained members of her five hundred club with a luncheon at the Matsonia. The following were guests: Mrs. O. C. De Priest, Mrs. Floyd Ellison, Mrs. F. L. Turner, Mrs. R. O. Dorsey, Mrs. L. C. Wetzle, Mrs. W. E. Miller, Mrs. P. L. Smith and Mrs. E. W. Lauer.

ALARMING!

Not all the absent minded people are professors because it happens to most any one once in a while. Such was the case one evening this week when a Hilltop woman who had been accustomed to putting her milk bottle on the front porch and taking the alarm clock upstairs with her when she retired, made the mistake of putting her alarm clock out to greet the milk man and took the milk bottle upstairs. This is nearly as good as winding the cat and putting the clock out.

Arthur Agustus Heyl, 81, piano tuner in Columbus and well-known musician died at his home, 589 S. Burgess Ave., on Thursday, Nov. 3. Death came very suddenly due to acute indigestion. Up until his illness he had been very active.

Mr. Heyl had lived on the Hilltop for the past eight years and a resident of Columbus all his life. He was one of the few members of the Odd Fellows lodge to hold the star for fifty years membership. He has been a member of Excelsior Lodge No. 165, I. O. O. F. for the past 54 years.

He was a pioneer piano tuner in this city and also well known for his music teaching. He was pianist at five different lodges and was busy every night of the week except Saturday and Sunday. He was a member of Glenwood M. E. church.

Mr. Heyl was a brother of William D. Heyl, former custodian of the State House, who died June 12. He is survived by two sons, D. W. Heyl of Huntington, W. Va., and A. G. Heyl of Columbus; two daughters, Mrs. H. G. Estep of Detroit and Miss Elizabeth Heyl at home; eight grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

He was buried at West Liberty on Monday morning.

The Junior High department of Glenwood church school will meet in the social rooms of the church on Friday evening, Nov. 11, at 7 o'clock.

An Armistice Day program will be given with E. A. Garrison as the speaker. Music will be furnished by the Blair trio. Recitations, fun and refreshments will be a part of the evening's program.

C. E. OFFICIAL AT HOGE MEMORIAL

E. A. Klahr, state executive of the Ohio Christian Endeavor Union, will speak at the regular Sunday evening church hour at Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church Sunday evening, Nov. 13.

Clyde Kelly will give a vocal solo, and Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Dodd of Akron, who led the Intermediate convention at Cleveland last July, will lead the congregational singing.

Fast and Prayer Day

Friday, Nov. 11, has been chosen as a day of fasting and prayer on behalf of China. It is suggested that prayer should be offered in connection with the observance of the day for those in authority in civil, military and political affairs in China; for the missionaries still on the field, for Chinese pastors and Christian; for divine wisdom in the conduct of churches and mission schools; for the spread of the Word of God, and for a great revival throughout the land.

Evangelistic Services to Close November 20

During the past week the evangelistic services at the Burgess Avenue U. B. church have had a good start and are now well under way. Rev. H. O. Thompson, pastor of the First U. B. church of Chillicothe, has been in charge of the services and has been assisted in the singing by Prof. J. E. Newell.

The general public is most cordially invited to attend these old time revival services. The meetings will continue until Nov. 20. There are meetings every night in the week except Saturday and special afternoon services on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 2 o'clock.

The Needle Art club spent a delightful afternoon with Mrs. Fleming, 126 S. Harris Ave., as hostess. Delectable refreshments were served. Next regular meeting will be the evening of Nov. 16th, with Mrs. Draper, Westgate avenue.

ELECTION HAS BIG SURPRISES

Randall and Green Successful in Campaign for School Board and Council Respectively.

In one of the heftiest contested elections in years thousands of voters went to the polls Tuesday and defeated and passed and elected and rejected.

In the race for mayor the present incumbent, Mayor James J. Thomas, won over the Democratic candidate, Sage H. Valentine, by a margin of over 3000 votes.

Cecil J. Randall, present president of the board of education, was elected to membership in that body by a good margin. Mr. Randall is a Hilltop man and received great support from this section. Maddox, Hocker and Kurtz were the other candidates elected.

In the race for city council, Floyd F. Green, a Hilltop resident, received third highest vote cast for four candidates to be elected, which will make him a member of that body next year.

Councilmen Karns and Lewis were re-elected by good margins. Miller, ran fourth. Ray G. Haunts, the other Hilltop candidate, was a close contestant of Miller.

For clerk of courts, Harry B. Lemon swamped his opponent by 24,000 votes.

For presiding judge, Miller defeated Altstin by approximately 31,000 votes. Mahaffey, with 28,464 votes led the field for associate judge by a wide margin.

On the issue of the three-mill school levy 26,182 votes were cast for it and 20,880 against. The one-third mill levy, which effected the firemen's and policemen's salaries, was defeated by over 11,000 votes.

Bond issues held no place in this election from the first that the market house bond, Third street viaduct and air port bond issues all failed by several thousand. The Bonlop bus franchise was also defeated by a big majority.

One of the most pulled of issues this election was the Mal—— which was defeated in the State of $60,000 and in Columbus alone by 32,000. The Chiropractic bill was turned down by the voters by over 10,000 votes.

Mr. and Mrs. Donald E. Waymer have moved into their new home at 55 Powhattan Drive, Westgate park.

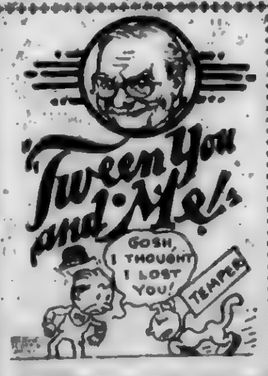
A BIGGIE HILLTOP

Every day there are new families moving over the Hilltop. Most are renters and if very great number are property owners. This great addition of population is essential for increased business for this section. And here is the [illegible] for other businesses to be established on the Hilltop.

There has been a big increase in the number of business houses on the Hilltop since last November. And there will continue to be new firms in the next year. The point is being reached where the Hilltop buyer needs not trudge to the central part of town over a distance of from three to four miles to buy the necessities of life. Today the Hilltop enjoys the same [illegible] markets and lower prices than does the downtown merchant.

These new business firms that are coming to our community are to be welcomed. It is to the advantage of the consumer and also the present Hilltop business man.



There are several reasons why the people should trade with Hilltop merchants. We will present another view in this column next week.

WORLD HIGHLY PRIZED WRITINGS OF AURELIUS

Marcus Aurelius is remembered not so much for what he accomplished as a Roman emperor, as for the little [illegible] in which he jotted down his thoughts from night to night while in his soldier's tent. He wrote the book simply as a record for himself, not for publication, yet not only did it survive, but it has been translated into 11 languages. It is safe to predict, says the Christian Science Monitor, that translations will continue to be made, for the "Meditations of Marcus Aurelius" is a book of perennial interest. Though through this book one is admitted to the inmost thoughts of the writer, yet the conception of Marcus Aurelius that is formed in this way is not complete. The thoughts, beautiful though they are, are tinged with a certain sadness. It will be remembered that the book was written when the cares of state were weighing on him, when after his gallant struggle to preserve the civilization of the past he was beginning to question whether it could be preserved.

Child labor is found to be increasing, the Federal Children's Bureau reports. Only twenty-nine cities and twelve states sent statistics for 1926, but in twenty-four of these cities and eight of these states the number of children from fourteen to sixteen years old who are legally at work increased during 1926. There are also many children in occupations for which work permits are not required, and many working illegally. The child-labor laws are still very imperfect. In many states children under fourteen may still work in canneries and factories; in many, children under sixteen may work from nine to eleven hours a day, or at night; many states allow children under fourteen to work around explosives.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE QUIET EAGLES

In the house where Kenneth lived there was a chair which had always fascinated him.

It was a Roman chair, and on either side were the heads of eagles. These [illegible] always made Kenneth wonder, for they looked very lifelike.

He talked to [illegible] about them, wondered [illegible] always being just the same.

Really it often made Kenneth quite sad to watch them, for they seemed very lonely. Little Kenneth knew of his own about that.

It had been a very nice party. But oh, he did feel so tired, for they had played [illegible] games but hull, in the ring, squat tag, and other games.

When Kenneth came home from the party it was not time for bedtime.

Blind Man's Bluff.

But secretly in his heart he was hoping it would come soon, for he had made up his mind that he would [illegible] to bed [illegible] bedtime.

He got a book from the library shelf. It was full of pictures of sailors and pirates, and he began [illegible] if anything would keep him awake that would.

He sat down with it on the Roman chair.

Strangely enough, though, after a moment or two, he didn't seem to see pirates, and the sea began to look very much more like the surface of a chair.

Soon the pirates disappeared entirely, and the four eagles of the Roman chair were looking at him steadily.

"You're terribly tired, aren't you?" said the first eagle.

"Yes, I'm a little tired," Kenneth admitted.

"Well, you're not as tired as we are," said the second eagle.

"No, indeed!" said the third eagle. "You're only tired because you've played so many games.

"We're tired because we're always quiet, always so very still."

Kenneth listened eagerly, because he'd so often thought just what he was hearing.

"Yes," said Kenneth very sympathetically, "I should think you would be very dull.

"I've often thought that. Have you been there a long time?"

"Oh, ages and ages!" replied the fourth eagle, who up to this time hadn't spoken.

"We were very old before your daddy got us. We've been on this chair a long, long time.

"We can't remember how long it was! We've been on and on and on that we are called eagles and shouting and get sore forever glued to this chair."

"Kenneth, Kenneth," cried Kenneth's mother, "it's long past bedtime!"

"Oh, I'm not as tired as the eagles are!" said Kenneth, and his mother thought that he must be talking in his sleep.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

LAYING A FOUNDATION

If you are a close observer and given to winnowing the golden grain from the sheaves that are falling all about you, you are laying a solid foundation on which to build your structure of success.

You have noticed how carefully masons select stones which are to bear the weight of skyscrapers, with what precision these stones are placed, side by side, kept level and plumb, and imbedded in cement.

Every layer, mark you, must be level and plumb. And mark again that no building can be stronger than the base upon which it rests.

What is true of stone structure is likewise true of mental and moral formation.

If the groundwork is weak, the fundamentals shatterny, the carniced and capitaled summit is in danger of falling.

The reason why so many men and women fail in their efforts to reach the apex of their dreams is because they failed to construct substantial supports in early life.

There has been much newspaper discussion anent the value of college education, and whether it really fits young men and women for the practical duties in professional and industrial pursuits. In a series of questions, Edison some time ago tested a number of university graduates. The result, it is alleged, was not satisfactory.

Schools and colleges should not be censured for these shortcomings, but rather the students themselves, who had overlooked the vital importance of laying in their early days a solid foundation on which to build.

Whatever you attempt, begin at the base and build solidly.

Test the strength of this base at every stage of your progress.

Don't be afraid of hard work and long hours.

In music you must first master the elementary principles, embodied in the notes; in surgery you must acquaint yourself with the location of the 208 bones in the human body. And so in all branches of art, science and industry, you must dig deeply and erect an enduring foundation.

Work, work, work and have faith. Dig through the difficulties and if you falter not in your endeavors your building will survive the storms and stand unshaken while the world tumbles all around you.

The Man with Three Names
by Harold MacGrath

COPYRIGHT BY THE BELL SYNDICATE INC.

When the last glorious note died away, Mansfield asked in an uncertain voice: "What was that"?

"The Swallow."

"What made you want to sing like that?"

"All this"—with a gesture. "To see grandly is to feel grandly! I love to be up high, to see far horizons. I am wild, daddy; they never tamed me."

Immediately an odd thing happened to her mentally. Out of the sunshine and the frosty mists came a clear picture. She saw that beautiful mother, her white hair and her serene face touched magically by candlelight; she heard divine music. She became afire with the craving to hear it again. A most bizarre resolve laid hold of her. Everything in her—breeding, teaching, tradition—demanded that she dismiss this resolve. Nancy nor her father wanted Betty Mansfield to know that mother and son. The doctor would not have evaded her query without a good reason. And yet, they belonged to that class of intellectuals from which she herself had received her training.

"Mother, this is Miss Mansfield," he had said; but he had not added: "My name is so-and-so."

In her world, persons who preferred to remain unknown acted thus for significant reasons; they did not care to know you or be known. But against this was their charming hospitality. Had they been everyday Bannister folks, she would have passed on and forgotten. The unwritten law of her kind forbade Betty to cross that threshold again. And she was going to cross it that very afternoon.

the face of the manuscript he had written: "From George Cottar to Nancy Maddox, his friend."

"Thanks. What beautiful script you write!"

"That's because I'm fussy. When I cross out a word, I generally throw the sheet away. A scandalous waste of paper, but I can't help it. Here's that mother o' mine."

When she returned home, Nancy ran straight to her room, turned on the light, and got out that precious page of manuscript. "From George Cottar to Nancy Maddox his friend." Having possessed a guilty conscience regarding the theft of the sheet, she had not dared scrutinize it heretofore. She had been ashamed to take it out of the drawer. But now she had a right. So she read the page through, and presently was struck by the curious method by which Cathewe concluded his sentences. A little cross, resembling an x. Now, what did that stir in her mind? A cross, resembling the little x. But the riddle remained unsolved.

That night a new phase of the drama unrolled. Cathewe was at his desk as usual, reading some proofs. The real estate reporter—truthfully, the cub, for the markets and real estate were his regular assignments, these jobs being the bill of fare of all cubs on provincial newspapers—came in rather breathlessly.

"Mr. Cathewe, I've stumbled on the rip-tangiest yarn you ever heard tell on."

"What's happened?" asked Cathewe cordially. He did not hold to the tradition that to make a reporter out of a cub one had to scare him to death first.

"Well, I came to you because it concerns Mansfield.

"Ah!"

"Know those tenements and shacks down by his mills?"

"Yes. Supposed to be owned by Colvin, but in reality owned by Mr. Mansfield. Go on."

"And those unsavory apartments on Melville street?"

Cathewe nodded. "Also owned by Mansfield."

"Well, the sale of them was recorded with the clerk this afternoon."

"Who purchased them?"

"Miss Mansfield!"

CHAPTER VII
The Doctor Speaks

Cathewe rocked in his swivel chair for a moment.

"Mr. White," he said frankly, "I don't want this repeated to a soul. This a personal affair between Mansfield and his daughter."

"But the whole town will hear of it, selling property to his daughter through a dummy," protested the cub.

"No. It's a good story, but we can't use it." And with a pleasant nod he dismissed the disappointed cub.

HERE AND THERE

By C. C. H.

It seems that Ford jokes will never cease and now we have a bigger joke than ever while we wait.

• • • •

Market price on junk has taken a decided jump and one reason for it may be the shut down in the Ford factories.

• • • •

Non-stop flights to Ann Arbor were all the rage last week. Will Rogers and his non-stop flights to Beverly Hills has nothing on the race of the collegiate flivvers.

• • • •

Jokes on the absent-minded professors are quite popular but not all the absent-minded are professors by any means.

• • • •

The reason some people are so absented-minded is that they go around giving their mind to other people.

• • • •

A jury called a prisoner absent-minded the other day because he failed to follow the custom of entering a plea of insanity.

• • • •

All the people who hand out things aren't good palmists. Some of them are only seeking offices.

• • • •

A freshman is a person that believes that all college girls are alike.

• • • •

Clothes don't make the man nor does a pair of shabby trousers ever cover a warm heart. So where do we get off?

• • • •

Ten thousand dollars was given by a popular magazine for the story called "Rebellion." It was one of 1300 submitted so there surely must be a rebellion some where. And as we thought the whole seat of trouble is with the modern young people who are so much disturbance to the sleeping older people.

• • • •

The trouble with all the wisecrackers of today who slam the younger generations is that they haven't enough salt in their bodies. It is not the fresh young set that needs salting down. It's the older people who need a little more salty red blood.

• • • •

A good rule for a well spent and enjoyable life is—sing a little, live a little and try a little mirth.

Department of Labor statistics concerning immigration for nine months ending March 31, 1927, show that New York State is the favorite future home of imigrants to this country. Of 246,322 immigrants, 64,096 intended to make their permanent residences in New York, while 28,908 were going to Massachusetts, and 22,047 to Pennsylvania.

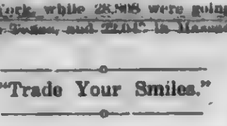
How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

THE "THRESHOLD"

This word which describes a doorstep or an entrance to a house or to a room and is used figuratively to indicate the beginning or entering upon any experience as "the threshold of life," "the threshold of a career," has a very interesting story.

Specifically, the threshold is a plank or stone or piece of timber which lies under a door, the sill, the place over which the first step is taken on entering. It comes to us—and that is the strange part of the story—from the Anglo-Saxon "perswald" which from "persean," signifies "to thresh!"



Tracing the connection of the word in its modern sense with its origin, we find that threshing, the beating out of the straw from the grains, has for ages been the first step in the preparation of the harvest for market.

UPHOLSTERING

The Mode Features Fringe In Strikingly Original Ways

Fringe flourishes in the realm of smart mode. It contributes its grace to both daytime and evening modes, always in ways most unique.

A testimony to the high regard with which fashionables view fringe was recently cited in that the wedding gown of a most distinguished bride was ornate with tiers of narrow silver fringe. The new beaded frocks, too, stress sparkling rows of crystal fringe. However, it is the wide colorful silken fringes which count most of all.

Illustrative of the novel treatment accorded fringe is this charming daytime gown to the right in the picture. This unusual model was designed for that favorite of favored film stars, Gertrude Olmstead. The wide ombre fringe, which shades from cocoa to chestnut brown, blends to the beige tone of the silk crepe which it trims. Note that the fringe is caught in at the hemline and the wrists, which of course confirms the striking originality displayed in its styling.

As for the evening frocks, many of them are a matter of one row of fringe upon another. If not in straight rows, then fringe travels along devious diagonal paths as it does on this lovely white crepe frock in the picture, which is so gracefully posed by Avonne Taylor, whose recent good work on the screen is bespeaking for her a most brilliant future.

For daytime wear, heavy black fringe generously trims many a black satin frock. Very new in the mode, is the method of suspending fringe from a yoke, catching it in at the bottom, perhaps under a plaiting of fabric, also belting it in at the waistline. Fringe arranged at the side of the skirt and the bodice in festooned rows, until it achieves a jabot effect, is one of the new methods of handling.

A smaller size of paper money has been proposed for circulation in the near future. The proposed bills are six inches long and two and a half inches wide. They would be easier to count and to handle, and probably would last longer than the larger bills now in use, as they would not have to be folded so many times.

"Trade Your Smiles."

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

WRONG SIDE OUT

If you accidently put on any undergarment—one worn next the skin—"wrong side out," it is an omen of good luck. Do not change it back upon discovering the mistake, for that would bring bad luck. A publication of the American Folk-lore society says: "This direction is intuitively followed by many people who are entirely free from conscious superstition." Very old people will tell you that when they were "children old" people used to say that undergarments worn wrong side out "kept the witches away."

This "wrong side out" superstition is a survival of the practice by which our barbarian ancestors sought to "fool" the evil spirit. Joined to that was the idea of the evil eye. By wearing his garments inside out a man distinguished himself, as it were, and the evil spirit particularly bent upon doing him harm failed to recognize him and passed him by. Also the evil eye would be attracted by the singularity of a garment worn wrong side out and let its baleful glance rest upon that instead of upon its wearer. In the far-off times when the superstition had its birth man, as a rule, wore only one garment, that next to his skin. The progress of civilization has increased the layers of clothing upon a man, but the primal superstition still clings to the primal garment to which it first attached itself and which has now evolved into underclothing.

In spite of the wide distribution of the population in western Australia, every child is given an education. In some of the more sparsely settled districts there are not more than eight children in a school. The usual subjects are taught and also physical culture, drawing, cooking, laundry work, hygiene, woodwork, needlework, gardening and nature study. Every school has a library. These schools are financed by the central government of each Australian state, so that they are not dependent on local politics. The teachers are regarded as civil servants.

WEST WINS FROM EAST

Cowboys Surprise Tigers By Piling Up Score of 22-0.

West High went after victory in real fashion on Thursday by trouncing the East Tigers to the score of 22-0 on the Central field.

This is the first game in the city high school league that West has won. They got off to a flying start by West taking the ball from their forty yard line on four first downs and then a pass from Walker to Adair was completed for the touchdown. Walker also took the extra point on the kick. The Cowboys marked up their other two points in the first quarter by downing an East man behind the goal line.

In the second quarter the Tigers were able to hold the West team to no scores. West scored again in the third quarter but the drop kick was blocked. On a fake kick play in the last quarter West scored again and chalked up the extra point to their credit also.

Walker and Wood played a very good game and Shanely showed up well. Tracy played well at center and was successful in recovering an East fumble.

Mrs. William Bricker and daughter, Miss Myra McCormick, of Lisbon, O., were week-end guests of Mrs. Bricker's aunt, Mrs. Isabelle Burnside, 92 N. Powell Ave.

NEW WHITE WAY OPEN SATURDAY

All lit up! That's us on the Hilltop.

On Saturday night, Nov. 19, the new white way lighting system will be turned on and all West Broad street will be a great stream of light from the bridge to the city limits at the Big Four R. R. This announcement was made at the municipal light plant Monday afternoon.

Workmen have been busy all week in placing the globes on these new lights and in making the last connections. This is one of the latest lighting systems to be installed in any city in America. The metal posts are placed 100 feet apart on both sides of the street and the lights are so shaped as to throw the rays of light downward and parallel to the street.

From the Scioto bridge to Sandusky street there are 1000 candle power lamps and from there west to the end of the line there are 600 candle power lamps in the system.

In celebration of the opening of the new lighting system the West Side Board of Trade has planned a big parade and jubilee to take place the night the lights are first turned on. A band and many floats will be in the parade. It will form at the west end of the Scioto bridge and will move west to Central avenue and return. One hundred dollars has been offered by the business men of that organization for the three best floats or decorated cars in the line of the parade.

A BIGGER HILLTOP

In addition to the advantages of trading with Hilltop merchants stated in this column last week there is one other big advantage that will probably surpass all others.

People who drive to town to shop are confronted with the parking problem. This does not appear so seriously on the Hilltop although there are many who say that the parking space on the Hilltop is almost as scarce as in the downtown section. This is true of West Broad street only on Saturday nights. Even then there is plenty of space on the side streets near to the business houses. West Broad street and Sullivant avenue have ample space for autos and never is one confronted with the problem of finding a space and wasting as high as half an hour in doing so. Neither is it necessary to pay the fee of the parking lot on the Hilltop.

It will save Hilltop buyers time and money to investigate the shopping facilities of the Hilltop—your own community.

The beautiful Gothic Cathedral of Burgos, the pride of Spain, is doomed to ruin unless steps are immediately taken to repair this structure. It was built in the thirteenth century by the British Bishop Maurice and changed in the next century by John of Cologne. "Burgos Cathedral stands amid a cluster of houses which seem to form an integral part of the mass of architecture with the cathedral in its elaborate splendor as their head." It is the opinion of architects of the day that it will be possible to save the tower, a part of which has crumbled. The Academy of Fine Arts of San Fernando is especially eager that the building be repaired and the work of John of Cologne restored to its original grandeur.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS
By H. IRVING KING

GOATS AND HEALTH

A superstition fairly common in this country and practically universal in England as well as in certain continental countries of Europe, is that, if one keeps other animals, it is a good thing to have a goat or two around also. The goats keep the other animals healthy.

This is in accordance with the character assigned the goat as a bearer of the afflictions and sins of others from time immemorial. Witness the scapegoat of the Jews. Among the early races of India goats were sacrificed by the thousand at certain festivals as offerings to the deities of the lower "cult" and the goat as a substitute for the human sacrifice of a boy was offered to Dionysus, the wine-god, by the Greeks. In being thus sacrificed it will be seen the goat played his characteristic part, a part well expressed by a modern slang phrase voicing an old idea. When anyone is made to bear the blame for the derelictions of others we say, "He is the goat," or "It seems I am the goat."

So we can see why it is well to have a goat or two about the place to take upon themselves the diseases which otherwise might be attached to the other domestic animals and to absorb our bad luck. And the goat is especially dedicated to "being the goat" for animals from the fact that he is sacred to the great god Pan, the god of the fields and farms and of the flocks and herds. In fact, Pan was represented in Greek art as having the upper part of his body like that of an elderly man while the lower part was like the hind quarters of a goat.

ADHESIVE TAPE FOR PICTURE FRAMES

Aside from the hairpin, it is doubtful if any one other household article is as useful and versatile as adhesive tape. When all its medical and surgical uses are mentioned there are still other uses, such as picture framing, to be filled with adhesive tape. After the tape has been placed on the glass and picture, it can be tinted a neutral tint to harmonize with the room. By careful fitting of the corners a neat piece of work is secured.

An insulation for electrical wires, adhesive tape is specially handy. A very fine tailored skirt can be effectively hemed without a seam by applying adhesive tape underneath, and pressing with a hot iron. Golf clubs, tennis rackets, and even the tops of children's rubbers can be mended with it. A slipping heel of a summer pump is easily remedied by a small strip of adhesive.

An obstinate corner of a rug that constantly turns up may be cured by pasting a small strip on the underside at a firm tension.

Adhesive wound around three or four medicine bottles, holding them upright and together will prevent them spilling during traveling.

In order to supply automobile owners with new shades of color, sea divers may have to go to the depths of the ocean to discover seaweed browns, coral pinks, and trout greens. There are now a thousand tints to choose from, but the color hunters are not satisfied.

The Man with Three Names

by Harold MacGrath

COPYRIGHT BY THE BELL SYNDICATE 1926.

Cathewe laid his pipe on his desk and crossed over to the window, from which he stared at the November stars. He wondered how Mansfield had failed to see how the town would interpret the equivocal sale of property. The ironmonger was disliked so heartily that folks would be only too happy to attribute the worst to him, that of unjecting his daughter of her personal fortune.

He began to feel sorry for Mansfield, for he saw that Mansfield was soon to lose. With a crystal soul like Betty's, love must have its foundation upon respect. Tear this away, and the whole edifice must topple.

At three o'clock that morning he stole up the path to the Maddox front door and pushed a letter through the slot. And the doctor read this remarkable letter while at the breakfast table:

"I honestly feel sorry for him. You go up to him and urge him to confess about this real estate transaction. Impress upon him that the town will interpret the deal as a desire on his part to absorb his daughter's fortune. Keep me out of it, of course. I could use this weapon with profound effect—if I were a first-rate scoundrel. Go to him as soon as you can."

Three days later Maddox showed Mansfield the letter, and said:

"There is a chance, if you tell her: there is none, if you don't. Murder will out. You've called this young chap a scoundrel. He is an honest man."

"John," the magnate answered, "the money Betty paid for that property goes back into it two-fold. On the day the last shingle goes on I intend to return to her her check. I simply couldn't tell her part of my income for years has been from those—those places."

"Well, what are you going to do about Cathewe?" pursued Maddox.

"Break him!" Mansfield brought his fist down upon his desk. "Break him! I am iron there. I'll tell you why." And he recounted the episode on board the giant Cunarder in 1912.

As he listened to this almost incredible tale the doctor's heart went down, down. The boy loved Betty, had come her to win her and his anger against Mansfield's malefactions had switched him onto another trail. Nancy! Out of all these curious actions and reactions here would be the broken heart.

"What Are You Going to Do About Cathewe?" Pursued Maddox.

He put Cathewe's letter away and got up. "Dunleigh, you're going home to lose your fight. You're going to lose your daughter, too. Tell her, man; tell her why you played such a farce as this real estate deal. Tell her the truth. Tell her that for years you've lived for and by yourself, a monument to selfishness. Tell her you took rents from the plague districts because you'd lost the perspectives of morality. That you never cared who rented the flats and apartments so long as the rents were forthcoming. Tell her you've taken money from honest men, through legal trickery. Tell her that you had forgotten her mother. Lord! Lord! Don't you know that women always forgive if you tell them; that they never forgive if the story comes to them from a third person? You've got the idea that you must cringe. Tell her with your chin up. If you've got to lose her, lose her like a sportsman," and the indignant Maddox rushed out of the study and out of the house.

Mansfield, with rather a childish burst of fury against the tides of fate that were closing in upon him, stalked to the study door and locked it. How many times did he stride from the fireplace to the far wall and back? A hundred times two, three hundred times.

Until this hour he had looked upon the real-estate deal with a kind of dry humor. When the hour came he would refund Betty's outlay. Wasn't that enough?

He dropped into his club at five and decided to dine there. He was still in a towering rage, and he did not care to face the girl's clear eyes until he had himself in hand. But he brought home some new books and a box of candy, which he placed before her door.

* * * * * * *

As Maddox entered his house he was greeted by a question from Nancy.

"Did you order that awning?"

"Awning?"

"Heaven's, he's forgotten! Don't you know what day this is?"

"Thursday."

"What date?"

He looked at the calendar and then his jaw dropped. Her birthday, and he had forgotten all about it! He jumped up, kissed her, and stormed back to the office where he had left his hat and coat. He rushed out and down to the chariot and went clattering off. He did not stop until he reached the shop of Bannister's fashionable jewelers. He was a rare visitor, but they knew him well.

"Daniels," he began, a little out of breath, "this is my daughter Nancy's birthday. I want a trinket that'll make her forget everything, even the day she was born," he added humorously.

"That falls in nicely," replied the jeweler. "We had something in the window the other day that attracted her."

"I see," said Maddox, preparing himself for the worst. "Pearls. Well, let me see it." So far as he was concerned, pills and pearls looked exactly alike. He would have to trust Daniels absolutely. How much?" he asked, after a glance at the string.

"Twenty-five hundred."

"Wrap it up—and charge. A thousand December first and the balance January first.

"Six months, if you like. We folks make you wait often enough."

From her bedroom window Nancy saw her father's return; but she did not run down to greet him. She was wondering what would happen when Brand and Betty Mansfield saw each other across the table at dinner that evening.

* * * * * * * *

Cathewe returned from New York that morning. He was not aware that a man, very much interested in his affairs followed him out of the car and to the taxicab stand. He sent a cold, level glance into the middle of Cathewe's back. At the taxicab stand he selected a cab for himself and directed the chauffeur to proceed at once to Dunleigh Mansfield's on Polygon hill. There will be no more of him. He comes into the story and goes out of it, comet-wise. But an astronomer will tell you that the aftermath of comets is devastation, annihilation, and obliteration. How many times, though, has this old top stood winking for the blow, to escape by a hair—the hair of the comet's tail?

Cathewe had an appointment at the office. The appointee was not a willing one; he was bowing to force. When he arrived his air was nonchalant, except for the restless and continuous shifting of the strong cigar from one corner of his mouth to the other.

"Well, here I am," he said impudently.

"Sit down, Shafer. Now, exactly, why did you, a member of the city's detective force, enter my home like a burglar and break into my safe?"

"Because we had information that you might be some kind of a crook," was the ready answer.

"You lie, Shafer. I'm going to give you a month to find a new job out of town. Oh, I shouldn't have sent for you if I hadn't something on you, as you would say."

"Nothing doing," answered the detective.

DESSERTS

Snow Pudding

Soak one and one-fourth tablespoonfuls of gelatin in one-fourth cupful of boiling water, add one cupful of sugar and one-fourth cupful of lemon juice. Stir until the sugar is dissolved, then strain into a large bowl and set into ice water to cool, stirring occasionally. Beat the whites of three eggs until stiff and when the gelatin begins to thicken add the beaten whites and beat together until very light. When stiff enough to mold, pour into a mold that has been rinsed in cold water. Make a boiled custard, using the yolks of the eggs well beaten, three tablspoonfuls of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of salt, a pint of hot milk; cook until smooth and flavor when cool with vanilla. Unmold the pudding and serve with the sauce around it.

Braised Cabbage

Melt one-fourth cupful of sweet fat in a saucepan, add two green apples and two onions finely chopped; cook gently for three minutes, then turn in one good-sized cabbage shredded, three cloves, one-half cupful of vinegar, one tablespoonful of salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper. Cover tightly and simmer for two and one-half hours.

Coconut Sponge

Dissolve a scant half envelope of gelatin in one-fourth cupful of cold water. Make a custard of two cupfuls of milk, three eggs and one-third of a cupful of sugar; cook until smooth and thick, remove from the heat and add the gelatin. When the mixture begins to set add one cupful of shredded coconut, a few grains of salt and a tablespoonful of vanilla, use just the yolks in the custard, beat the whites stiff and fold in at the last. Line a mold with sections of orange, pour in the mixture and chill.

Orange Ice

Make a syrup using four cupfuls of water to two of sugar, boiling twenty minutes; add two cupfuls of orange juice, one-fourth cupful of lemon juice and the grated rind of two oranges. Cool, strain and freeze.

Eggs in Tomato Sauce Make Good Dinner Dish

Do you enjoy an occasional egg dinner? Some people think of eggs as suitable only for breakfast, luncheon, or supper, and do not regard them as substantial enough for dinner. As a matter of fact, however, eggs contain the same kind of efficient protein for body building that is found in meat. Eggs, particularly the yolks, are rich, too, in mineral substances and they are one of the best sources of vitamine A which everybody needs for health and physical well being. What makes eggs seem to be less substantial than some other foods is that their food materials are in such form that they can be rather quickly assimilated by the body.—Eggs are pure food material mixed with water. Because of their rather large percentage of water, when serving eggs for dinner it is well to allow two or more apiece for the grown-up members of the family. An exact recipe cannot be given without knowing the number of persons in your family. With these proportions for sauce enough to go with six eggs in mind, you can count noses and estimate the exact quantities needed.

Make a sauce by blending three tablespoonfuls of flour and two tablespoonfuls of melted butter and combining with two cupfuls of tomato juice and pulp and seasonings—one and one-half teaspoonfuls salt, one-quarter teaspoonful of pepper, one-half teaspoonful celery salt. If you are planning to bake your eggs put about half the sauce in a shallow buttered baking dish or pie plate and then break the eggs separately in a saucer and slide them carefully, one at a time, into the sauce. If you have more than six eggs, use two dishes. Cover the eggs with the rest of the sauce and sprinkle three tablespoonfuls of grated cheese over the top. Bake in a moderate oven until the eggs are set.

If you like, you can heat all the sauce in a skillet and poach the eggs in it, handling them carefully as before. In this case, spread rice or noodles on a hot platter while the eggs are cooking, skim out the eggs as they are done and slip them on top of the rice or noodles, and pour the tomato sauce over the whole dish.

A kind of mineral wax is obtained by mining from an island in the Caspian sea. It is used in making candles, phonograph records, and other articles for which a wax base is needed. The mining is dangerous because of the softness of the wax which cannot stand high pressure and is sometimes pushed into the shafts on top of the men.

Smart for College and Sports Is the Novelty Woolen Blouse

A study of the new modes reveals the prominence of novelty woolens in the realm of sports and utilitarian apparel. Which fact contributes directly to the attractiveness of clothes for the schoolgirl.

What with the gay flannels and woolen crepes, patterned tweeds, ombre striped reps, tricolor knit effects and the like the classroom is destined to stage a scene of animated color and design this season.

A smart note for fall is the two-piece flannel frock, combining solid color with patterned. The costume in the picture is the latest offering of a leading Parisian couturier. The material is beige kasha, the skirt a wrap-around of plain color and the blouse of plaid design with high neck and long sleeves. An ideal costume this for the college girl.

The most intriguing item of chic in the new sports and school clothes is undoubtedly the blouse. Originality is interpreted in its every phase. For its development every cunning medium is employed from flannel and velveteen to jersey and myriads of knitted effects. Color schemes for the new blouse are at once startling and fascinating.

The latest flight of imagination is the blouse of tricolor stripe. That is, the knitted jumper shows horizontal stripes full eight inches deep, beginning with light shade for the top, grading to darker for the central portion, finishing with the deepest tone around the hips. The accompaniment of a simple cardigan coat and skirt of woolen which is neutral in tone accents the color story of the blouse.

Very clever sports ensembles face the tuxedo revers of the full-length coat with the same vivid knitted medium as that employed for the blouse. When one visualizes the knitted stripes in hues of yellow, red, green and navy, the effectiveness of the color scheme is most assuring.

Tweed printed velveteens are also among the newer fabrics which are in evidence for the creation of the separate blouse.

Altered Countenance

Roger, ordinarily quite a peaceable child, came home after a fight with his new neighbor.

"Well, Roger, I'm ashamed of you!" mother said, sternly. "And I'm certainly surprised at that new boy fighting; I thought he had the nicest face!"

"Well, he ain't got it now!" replied Roger, reminiscently.

Advance Tip

"Kenneth Joslin Jones," piped the little girl. "I'm going right over and tell your mother what you said!"

"Huh!" snorted the terrible lad "My mamma's in Paris an' by the time you see her again you'll be my step-sister, if you know what I mean!"—American Legion Monthly.

Not Quite Right

Mother (leaving Egyptian room in museum)—What did you think of it, dear?

Dorothy—Well, it was all right, but I don't see why there were so many mummies and no daddies.

Oh, Prunes!

Johnnie—Why, Uncle Hiram, what are you doing in that tree?

Uncle Hiram—Pruning, my boy.

Johnnie—Say, suppose I don't know that's an apple tree?

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

HAPPINESS

The birds found a new room for breakfast.

It was in a row of bushes—and the bushes were berry bushes.

One day as they were having the best sort of a time eating, who should look down at them but the King of the Clouds.

He looked quite dark and solemn.

"Te-wit," said one little bird, and another said:

"T-r-i-l-l."

"How about some water to drink?" asked the King of the Clouds.

"Some nice, fresh water?"

The birds began chirping for all they were worth.

The grown-ups said:

"Listen to the noise the birds are making. It must be going to rain—they're crying for water."

And sure enough, they were begging the King of the Clouds to send some of his Army of Raindrops down to the earth.

"Please, please, please, Cloud King, send us rainwater," chirped the birds.

"All right," roared the Cloud King. "I will."

"But we don't want thunder," said the birds. "We want to stay out and we're afraid of thunder.

"Won't you send us a good old-fashioned shower?"

And the Cloud King called:

"Raindrops, raindrops, come and patter down to earth. But gently, little raindrops. And when you see the beak of a little bird open, one small raindrop must walk inside."

How Nice a Bath Does Feel.

Down came the raindrops very softly and gently to the earth.

"Children," called Mother Robin, "come for your baths in these hollow stones. They're filled with water."

All around the mother birds were calling the little ones to their baths.

"Oh," said one little robin as he ducked his head into the water, and then shook all over and spattered it about, "how nice a bath does feel."

The Cloud King looked as bright and happy, that the mother birds were afraid it would stop raining.

"Don't stop Cloud King," they chirped.

"I won't," said the Cloud King. And the birds twittered and sang and wet their little throats with the delicious rainwater.

After the Cloud King and his Army of Raindrops had been working for quite a long time, one of the birds noticed that the new breakfast room in the berry bushes was getting very wet.

"It will spoil our berries for breakfast, I'm afraid," he said.

But the berries whispered back:

"No, we like the rain, too. We needed some water to drink.

"And more of us will come tomorrow. Your breakfast will be better than ever."

All day long the rain kept up gently. When it was almost bedtime who should appear but old Mr. Sun.

"Shall I dry your little feathers?" he said to the birds.

And every little bird in birdland was warm and dry and happy when he tucked his head under his wing that night.

You'll do better at Seiller's "after all."

As cows are scarce in China, the people rely mostly on condensed milk, which is imported. It was discovered that the American brand with a carnation label was unpopular because the Chinese associate that flower with bad luck. The peony, which is a good-luck flower in China, proved to be a much more successful means of designating the same brand of milk.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

PICKING FLAWS.

Ever since the world began and the serpent convinced Eve that the Garden arrangements were not at all what they should be, criticism has been one of the most popular activities of the human mind.

Did you ever notice how many "I's" there are in the world?

Criticism.

It is the "I's" that make it so popular. Listen to a habitual critic, a well-developed fault-finder. Every one of his criticisms begins with "I think" or "I believe" or "I see," and then follows his opinion, fully and freely expressed.

Criticism, when the critic knows what he is talking about and delivers his opinion in a constructive and helpful way, is well worth while. When it is offered without a basis of information and experience and without a service of betterment it is harmful and worse than useless.

Too often the critic measures the learning and wisdom of others by the yardstick of his own ignorance or prejudice.

One of the greatest statues carved by Michelangelo was the colossal "Young David," which he cut from a block of marble which another sculptor had rejected some forty years before.

This statue of David and his superlative figure of Moses are the greatest statues since the days of Praxiteles and worthy to rank with the best Greece produced.

When Michelangelo had finished "David" he asked some of his artist friends to view it, among them Soderini, of little talent and soon forgotten.

Vasari, who was a great admirer of Michelangelo and whose stories of the art world at that period are interesting reading, tells the anecdote of Soderini's criticism as follows:

"When he saw the statute it pleased him much, but he said to Michelangelo, who was engaged in retouching it, that he thought the nose was too thick. Michelangelo, seeing that Soderini was below the statute and could not see it truly, to satisfy him went up on the scaffold, taking with him a chisel and a little marble and made believe as if working, letting a little dust fall from his hand as he did so, but not at any time touching the nose of the figure. Then looking down at Soderini he said: 'Look at it now.'

"'It pleases me much better,' said Soderini, 'you have given it life.'

"'So,' says Vasari, 'Michelangelo came down, pitying those who make a show of understanding matters about which they really know nothing.'"

Do not think that because a man accepts your criticism he really thinks your judgement better than his. He accepts it, perhaps, because your are his boss or because he would rather endure your wrong judgement than to waste his time in argument.

Disraeli, earl of Beaconfield, who had his full share of criticism, said: "It is much easier to be critical than to be correct."

Socrates, when he was told by the Delphic oracle that he was the wisest man in all Greece, which was undoubtedly true, replied: "'Tis because that I alone of all the Greeks know that I know nothing."

To criticise that which you yourself cannot equal is impudence.

Measure yourself before you estimate others.

There is no surer way to prove your ignorance and establish your littleness than to devote your life to the criticism of those whose efforts and accomplishments are beyond the capacity of your own endeavors.

Perpetual Care
THE modern park or garden cemetery—an American idea of recent origin—has many advantages over the old graveyard, not only in appearance, but also in economy of maintenance. The uniform perpetual care of each lot without annual charges, assessments or extras, is an important forward step in cemetery maintenance and has met with public approval wherever used.
MEMORIAL BURIAL PARK is the LARGEST and ONLY cemetery serving Columbus and Franklin County in which EVERY LOT is ASSURRED PERPETUAL MAINTENANCE, by taking a part of the purchase price of the lot to establish the PERPETUAL CARE FUND.
You are invited to investigate the Perpetual Care Method and easy ownership plan of purchase adopted by Memorial Burial Park before making your selection.

The West High Literary society has been revived and members are planning programs for the year.

Twenty-eight new members were admitted to the Girl Reserves at their recognition services on Nov. 10.

Thirty-five couples attended the annual hay ride of the West Hi-Y club on Oct. 28.

The 10A and 11B Math clubs were organized last week. They held their first program last Friday.

This year's services will be held in Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church, South Eureka avenue. The address for this service will be delivered by Rev. J. N. Johnston, pastor of the Hilltop Church of Christ. Prayer will be offered by Rev. C. A. Baughman, pastor of the Hilltop Lutheran church and Rev. W. E. Weiland will read the scripture.

This service is for the entire Hilltop and all are asked to join in this hour of praise to God for the bounteous blessing bestowed upon us during the past year, as a citizen, as a community and as a nation.

CHRISTMAS SHOPPERS

Already the sprigs of pine have been placed on the streets as decorations by the merchants and we are reminded that the time from now until Christmas is limited. But it is doubtful if the thought of Christmas shopping has as yet really penetrated any of us.

Christmas shopping like everything else can be better accomplished if not put off until the last minute. The early shopper gets the gravy of the gifts that are available. One might say that there will be an unlimited supply but nevertheless if shopping is done earlier one is sure to find things that are more suitable and more reasonable than they will be the last few days before Christmas.

And it is also to be remembered that the tired feeling that goes with this shopping period can be reduced to nothing if more time is taken when the stores are not so crowded. Early shopping is really a pleasure. Now is the time to begin planning for this great event that is but a few weeks away.

Last week Lindy received a degree of Master of Science in Aeronautics at St. Josephs College, Philadelphia. He was attired in cap and gown in the usual manner. (Continued from last week)

"I'm not going to say any more. The interview is over. Good morning. Thirty days. . . . or five years."

"What's that?"

"Five years. The evidence I have against you may be computed in so much prison time. Good morning."

The blood boiled up in the detective's face; but the cold blue eyes looking up into his made him reconsider the impulse to start something of a purely physical nature. He left.

Cathewe swung his chair around to his desk just as the telephone rang.

It was Nancy, who wanted to make sure that he would attend her birthday dinner.

A pause. "Sure I'll be there," he answered.

"Brand, how come you to make those curious little periods in your manuscripts?"

"Periods. Oh, I see. You mean the cross. That is the habit of newspaper writers. It is to indicate to the compositor that the sentence ends there."

"Ah! I was just curious. Now I understand. At seven, then, Mr. Cottar!"

She left the phone and saw Betty, who had just come in, standing in the hall.

"I received a letter this morning," said Betty, slowly.

"A letter?"

"Don't you remember,"

"You mean a letter from that shadow man you told me about in Washington?"

"Yes . I . . . I had to sit down when I saw that envelope. My knees wouldn't hold me up."

"Was it postmarked New York?"

"Yes. It isn't fair. The whole thing hasn't been fair. I had never injured anyone. I wasn't a flirt. The letter, Nancy, was goodby."

"You'll get over it, dear?" said Nancy hating herself. A word or two, and the riddle would be solved. Generous beyond ordinary, she stifled the impulse to take that page of manuscript from her bosom and spread it out for Betty to see. Once, indeed, her hand did steal up; but stonily she forced it down. What was the use in telling Betty? said Specious Argument. Wasn't there the width of the poles between Betty Mansfield and this shadow man? Hadn't he himself made it impossible?

CHAPTER VIII

On the morning that Cathewe arrived from New York the cub reporter, an industrious chap, got down before lunch and went into the file room.

Using his penknife he hacked out every editorial and news story he could find relating to Mansfield. When this task was completed he put them into a manila envelope, sealed and stamped it, and carried it over to the post office, where he dropped it into the local mail-slot.

Then he was suddenly seized with regret and wished he had used more discretion.

He quitted the post office for the street, and walked half a block. There was no use arguing; he would have to get that letter back. He turned and trotted back to the post office, entered one of the rear doors and interviewed the chief clerk.

"Can't be done," the latter replied. "It'll have to go through."

That seemed final.

The cub saw that the case was hopeless. Utterly miserable, he turned into a side street and sought a favorite haunt of his—a buffet-saloon. He ordered a plate of hash and a cup of coffee and was striving to swallow without choking when his "listening in" faculties were aroused by a snatch of conversation in the next booth.

MYSTERY IS UNSOLVED AS FILM CATCHES FIRE

It was in the middle of that very mysterious and exciting photo play, "The Cat and the Canary." The long hairy hand had torn the diamond necklace from the sleeping heir of the West estate. All was in turmoil as the other members of the house gathered around in an attempt to solve the mystery. A panel in the wall opened and the body of the old trustee who had disappeared a few hours before dropped out. The hero who might also be called the comedian was exerting every ounce of energy in thinking of how to solve the mystery.

Then—crack! The film broke, caught fire and all this excitement was ended and the mystery remained unsolved.

This happened at the Sunday afternoon show at the Ritz theatre. Another feature was substituted and the show continued.

To those who didn't see the re-run of the show Monday night, the mystery remained unsolved.

Paul Churton, Huntington, W. Va., is a guest at the home of his grandmother, Mrs. Isabel Burnside, 92 N. Powell Ave.

OUR NEW WHITE WAY

Just recently another step in improvement of our city was completed when the new white way lighting system was turned on in West Broad street.

This is a long needed improvement and one that will be lasting for many years. The lighting itself cannot be surpassed in any city in the United States. There are but few cities that can stand out in lighting effects that will equal those in our city.

At present these lights go from north to south and from east to west on the two main thoroughfares of the city. The traveller who enters the city at night time is well aware of a spirit of improvement that is present in this city. What could be a better advertisement that this new electric "sign"?

The elimination of the old wood poles and the dangling globes that flickered off and on and appeared as specks against the night is much to be appreciated by residents of this city. We of the Hilltop are proud of our part of the new white way.

NEW ART CLASS AT "Y" SCHOOL

Advertising Art Now Offered in Two Classes Each Week at "Y" School.

Advertising art has been added to the subjects available at the Columbus Y. M. C. A. downtown school of commerce. These new art classes are in charge of George A. Whisner, director of art department at the Terry Engraving Co.

Sessions of this advertising class meet each Monday and Friday evening.

Whisner, who has been associated with Terry's ever since his graduation from South High school in 1908, is director of the largest art staff in Columbus. He has taken a leave of absence only during his study in New York City under Winald Rice. Previously he had been a student of Julius Golz at the Columbus Art school.

Remarking that "Unless an artist is doing creative work every day, he soon begins slipping backward," Whisner explains his own constant activity. He never permits his executive duties to keep him away from his board and his pencils and brushes.

For the past three years, he has conducted private classes in the Pen and Pencil Club rooms, but he plans to continue his teaching only in the art department of the downtown Y. M. C. A. school of commerce.

As a member of the Pen and Pencil Club since 1911, he is a former president of the group and a permanent member of the entertainment committee.

SYMPHONY HERE ON DECEMBER 5

Cincinnati Symphony Will Play at Memorial Hall on Monday.

Music critics characterized the concert by the New York Philharmonic orchestra in Memorial hall on November 8, last, as the greatest musical spectacle and demonstration of its kind in the history of Columbus. Readers of the Record will be interested in knowing that another symphony orchestra, the Cincinnati, one of America's foremost, will provide the next concert of equal impressiveness at Memorial hall on Monday evening Dec. 5.

In fact two concerts will be given by the Cincinnati on that date, one an afternoon popular performance, especially arranged for children, students and mothers who wish to bring their youngsters with them.

The evening concert will be under the baton of Victor De Sabata, guest conductor and brilliant young Italian maestro and composer. He is making his initial apearance in Columbus as well as in America. The afternoon performance will be under the direction of Vladimir Bakeleinikoff, eminent Russian conductor, who has made a special study of symphony music for children.

These afternon concerts have been arranged by the Symphony club of Central Ohio, sponsors of the series, with the special view of educating children in the best there is in music, all being in line with what is being taught them every day in the public schools.

Two other concerts are on the series, namely, those of the Minneapolis and Cleveland symphonies. Percy Grainger noted pianist composer, and Rafaelo Diaz, Metropolitan Opera tenor, will be featured on the Minneapolis and Cleveland programs, respectively.

Patrons to both matinee and evening concerts are urged to be in their seats promptly, it being explained by officials of the symphony club that the noise of late arrivals is distressing to both the musicians and conductor, with the result that the continuity of the number being played is broken.

Profits from the afternoon popular concerts will be used by the Symphony club to buy orchestral instruments and phonograph records for the Columbus public schools. Another children's concert will be given on the afternoon of March 5 by the Cleveland orchestra.

Season tickets for the remaining three concerts will go on sale at the box office in the Karl Koch Co., Broad and Third streets, on Wednesday, Nov. 30. Season prices are $8.00, $6.00, $4.00 and $2.00. Early reservations are urged by Helene Pugh Alcorn executive secretary in charge of the sale of tickets.

The Man With Three Names

By Harold MacGrath

(By Bell Syndicate)

"Tonight—guard at the south gate—more isolated."

Once in the street he made for the police station as fast as his legs could carry him. He dashed into the day captain's office. He made a bad beginning. He introduced himself and his paper.

"Huh! Well, whaddis yuh want?"

"Overheard something in Cahill's talking about blowing up something tonight. They're there yet. Can you give me a couple of men?"

"On your way! Everybody's seeing things."

"You refuse?"

"Clear out!" belligerently. "The Herald ain't too popular in here, Mog!"

The reporter ran back to Cahill's, and the blood jumped into his throat when he observed that the men had not yet gone. Thrilled, he sat down and ordered another cup of coffee. He would trail these chaps; and trail them he did. North, east, south and west, through this alley and that, toward the country back to town off for the railroad yard and back to Cahill's.

They kept him there at Cahill's until 9 o'clock that night.

At nine the men departed, and the cub began his trailing again. This time there were no tortuous windings. The men headed directly toward the railway yard, and the cub decided that they were going to wreck the Mansfield steel mills.

Suddenly his men vanished. The boy fell into a dog-trot to the end of a string of empty freight cars. As he passed the last car, the sky fell out. When he came to his senses he could see the cold starry sky above him. It had stopped snowing earlier in the evening. He was at the bottom of a coal car, which might be hauled to the main line at any moment. In that event he would breakfast somewhere around Scranton.

It was midnight when he climbed the stairs to the editorial rooms. His face and hands were streaked with blood and coal-dust; he was a sartorial as well as a physical wreck. Instinctively, he staggered toward Cathewe's door—open as usual—because he knew that the chief would not laugh at him.

"Chief!" began the boy, rocking on his heels. "They—got me!—I was a boob to try it a—lone! But I thought—if I reported here, you'd laugh or send somebody else. Anyhow I tried—."

Cathewe turned his head and sprang to his feet just in time to catch the boy as he pitched forward.

* * * * * * *

Before leaving for Nancy's that night Betty told her father that she, too, held Cathewe in the hollow of her hand and could crush him at will.

She kissed him and sped to the door, where she paused for a second. What a handsome man he was, this daddy of hers! In after days she always thanked God for that glance; for she never saw her father's face like that again.

Mansfield selected a cigar, forgetting his own dinner was in the process of making, and blew a cloud above his head. What the dickens had the child discovered concerning Cathewe, Cathewe the impeccable, at least here in Bannister? What had she discovered that the local police force could not? The hollow of her hand, she had said. She was her father's daughter.

That detective was clever, he reflected. He had worked upon the simplest line imaginable; taken Cathewe's photograph and gone the rounds of the New York banks, and lay before yesterday a teller and a cashier had recognized it. The son of Digby Hallowell!

When the dinner came to the coffee and cigar, the butler withdrew, and Mansfield sloped comfortably in his chair.

There is magic for some in coffee and tobacco. The stimulant is negatived by the narcotic; the thinking machine moves smoothly. There came into Mansfield's head a plan for the reconstruction of Bannister, through Betty.

To give the girl a free hand without creating a revolution. Somehow that appealed to his sporting blood. Cathewe out of the way, the spark in the powder-room would be extinguished.

But what did the child mean when she said she had the man in the hollow of her hand? Well, that puzzle would be explained away in the morning. She was her father's daughter. Under that grace of form, under that gentle tenderness and charity there was reinforcement of steel.

* * * * * * *

Cathewe was anxious to have a little chat with Nancy before her guests began to arrive. He had telephoned her to this effect, and she had made the appointment at half after six.

"George Cottar, what in the world have you to say to me that's more important than my new dress?" she began.

"Youve been puzzled regarding my conduct in relation to Miss Mansfield. Haven't you?"

"Yes. Are you going to tell me that you came here because you'd fallen in love with Betty—somewhere else?"

"I didn't suspect you were so keen, Nancy. But you've hit upon the truth. Mansfield told me I might pay court to his daughter upon the condition that I come to Bannister and become a force. I shan't go into those details now; some future date, perhaps."

"Do you want me to help you?" She reached over and laid her hand on his. "As between two friends?"

"Nothing but magic or black art could help me, Nancy."

"I'm not so sure," she replied, recalling that peculiar punctuation mark in his manuscript.

"It is not possible, Nancy. I came here because I loved her, at first sight, to find myself hoist 'twixt the devil and the deep blue sea. I had to fight her father: I had elected a certain way to go."

"'Loved I not honor more,'" quoted Nancy, softly. "Or is it that you fear your fate too much?"

"You are making fun of me?"

"No, Brand. I am very sorry. I understand. A miracle must happen."

"And there ain't no sech animal. The power of Mansfield's will had lain upon this town until it was pretty bad in spots. So I undertook to hammer into the public mind just how baneful his influence was. I don't suppose he himself realized to what depth he had fallen. I didn't awaken him. He has given me thunder for thunder. But contact with the beautiful mind of his daughter softened him gradually; and your father tells me that now Mansfield loves his daughter. And she is redeeming him.

"And I know positively that I have never been pointed out to her—as I shall be presently. I'm not going to hide any longer. So I have laid the dream away."

Mother's Cook Book

If either man or woman would realize the full power of personal beauty, it must be by cherishing noble thoughts and hopes and purposes; by having something to do and something to live for that is worthy of humanity, and which, by expanding the capacities of the soul gives expansion and symmetry to the body which contains it.—Upham.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

Preserved pineapple is so expensive that most of us are glad to prepare our own.

Candied Pineapple.

Peel the fruit and cut it into strips two inches long, one-half inch wide and one-fourth inch thick. Measure the fruit and add half the quantity of sugar and let stand until the sugar is dissolved—which may be 24 hours. Drain off the juice and boil it five minutes, then add the fruit and cook for five minutes. Spread the pineapple on a plate in the sun, turn when dry and roll in granulated sugar when well dried. Pack in box with waxed paper between the layers.

Indian Chutney.

Take two quarts of tart apples and green tomatoes, two pounds of seedless raisins, three cupfuls of brown sugar and the same of vinegar, one small onion, two cupfuls of lemon juice, one teaspoonful red pepper, one-half teaspoonful salt and a small jar of preserved ginger. Peel and core the apples and put them with the tomatoes and onion through the meat chopper, also the raisins. Mix all the ingredients in a stone jar and let stand over night. In the morning set the jar into a kettlee of cold water, heat slowly and cook six hours, stirring often. A spoonful of this chutney added to various dishes adds a very unusual and delighted flavor.

Plainfield Cold Pickle.

Taken sixteen ripe tomatoes, four onions finely chopped, add one cupful of vinegar, 3 tablespoonsful salt, one cupful sugar and half a teaspoonful of cayenne pepper. Mix and bottle cold. Seal with paraffin.

Crabapple Jelly.

Wash and core enough apples to weigh a pound, add two quarts of cold water, cook 20 minutes or until clear. To each pint of the liquid add one pound of sugar. Put the juice in a kettle, boil for ten minutes, then add the sugar which has been heating in the oven. Boil until it jells when tried in a cold dish.

Velvet Contributes Elegance to the Autumn Ensemble

Behold velvet as the fabric triumphant in the world of fashion! Velvet is solving most of the dress problems for every hour of the day as well as for evening wear. That velvet holds sway throughout all fashiondom, emphasises the fact that the mode is in augurating an era of surpassing elegance.

An ensemble of chestnut brown velvet with a bronze-and-gold metal brocade blouse, such as is here pictured, is a convincing argument in favor of the luxuriousness which fashion prescribes.

Perhaps, notwithstanding its de luxe appearance, no costume registers a more convincing economy than does the velvet ensemble which includes a full-length coat which may be used as a separate wrap. Such a wearable outfit is a "bargain" at any price. The topcoat of velvet extending to the hemline of the velvet skirt over which it is posed is the "last word" from Paris. Some women of a very economical turn of mind buy a handsome black velvet coat, often fur collared and cuffed. This they "match up" with a few yards of velvet for the making of the skirt. With a metal cloth blouse, which is easily made by one's home dressmaker, an ensemble is acquired at a minimum outlay.

Not only is the costume of black velvet highlighted by the mode, for colors are equally as prominent. Dark greens, wine shades and navy velvet ensembles present a gorgeous spectacle of lovely color. Especial attention is concentrating upon beige and upon brown velvets, rendered exquisite with trimmings of blended furs.

Don't wait for your chance to be handed to you
Wrapped up and tied with a bow,
Keep right on the job with the goal in view
And learn all there is to know.

Sit tight and watch—but do your best
With the duties of every day,
And fit yourself for the final test
When the Big Chance comes your way.

For all things come to those who wait—
And work while they're waiting, too;
There's no such thing as luck or fate—
The whole thing is up to YOU!

Don't make excuses for missing your chance
Or say that it never came—
For those who know, can tell at a glance,
You're looking for something to blame.

A lot of chances have come to men
Who never knew they were there;
So the chances went their way again,
And no one could find out where.

Opportunity knocks at many a door,
When the fellow asleep inside
Missed the thing he was hoping for,
Because he had never tried.

So be up and doing—keep wide awake,
For your chance may be near—not far,
And when it comes for you to take,
Just grab it—and there you are!

P.-T. A. HEARS DR. BENSON

"Use Positive Method With Children," Says Supt. of White Cross Hospital.

Dr. John Benson, superintendent of White Cross hospital, in an address to members of West Broad P.-T. A on November 18, urged that parents use the positive rather than the negative method in the training of their children, saying that the latter method would lead them to believe that a sure way of being good and going to Heaven would be by not doing things, instead of being a doer.

To tell a child not to do a thing, he said, created and strengthened the opposite desire. He illustrated this with a humorous experience of his own childhood.

He also called attention to the fact, the we spend about six times more per capita each year for funerals, flowers and monuments, or "to die" than we do to live, and that formerly puny, sickly people were thought to be nearer Heaven than the healthy, robust ones, but that we had come to realize that sickness and disease, were caused by ignorance of man, and not by any act of God; and that better health habits in the last 25 years had increased the average life from 41 to 52 years. He predicted that in 25 more years we might reasonably expect to live the allotted three score years and ten.

Miss Ruth Dell, pupil of Walter King, gave two excellent piano selections and a Father's quartet, composed of Haydn Jones, D. O. Jenkins, Howard Young and D. Lloyd McCready, accompanied by Walter King gave two numbers which were well received.

The hour that followed was in charge of the social committee, light refreshments were served and everybody took part in helping to make this a real "get acquainted" affair.

"HAPPY LIFE"

John Burroughs, the naturalist, for whom the John Burroughs school is named, was born April 3, 1837. In 1911, when the children of New York city were planning a celebration in honor of his seventy-fourth birthday, he wrote them a letter, from which we quote:

"Let me hope that when you have reached my age, you will be as well and as young as I am. I am still a boy at heart, and enjoy almost everything that boys do, except making a racket. Youth and age have not much to do with years. You are young as long as you keep your interest in things and relish your daily bread.

"As the years pass, I think my interest in this huge globe upon which we live, and in the life which it holds, deepens. An active interest in life keeps the currents going and keeps them clear. Mountain streams are young streams; they sing and sparkle as they go, and our lives may be the same. With me, the secret of my youth in age is the simple life, simple food, sound sleep, the open air, daily work, kind thoughts, love of nature, and joy and contentment in the world in which I live. No excesses, no alcoholic drinks, no tobacco, no tea or coffee, no stimulants stronger than water and food.

"I have had a happy life. I have gathered my grapes with the bloom upon them. May you all do the same."

The above quotation is taken from "Our Friend John Burroughs," a book by Clara Barrus, which the friends of John Burroughs school will enjoy reading.

Professor A. V. Hill, noted English physiologist, has made experiments in regard to the speed limit of runners. He has perfected a method of measuring the expenditure of energy with its effect on the athlete, and of calculating his speed for a given distance. When present-day records are broken, it will probably be by very small fractions of a second. When a man is running at a high rate of speed, lactic acid, a product of muscular fatigue, is manufactured at a rate such as will in a short time result in a considerable falling off of speed. Muscles must have oxygen to burn up carbohydrates, but it is possible to store up oxygen, replacing it during a period of rest. In long runs, an athlete must be able to "borrow" oxygen and repay it later.

WEST BROAD ST. SCHOOL NOTES

The principal and teachers wish to thank the parents for the generous donation of clothing, canned goods and vegetables received at Thanksgiving All were distributed where the need was very great. The shoe fund amounted to $80, as against $85 last year, but it is a fine amount. This is checked out to the clerk of the board of education, and through the attendance department, orders are given when needed.

Charlotte Freshour and Henry Ruegg of the 6th grades, are the school reporters for the Citizen.

Seventy-six pupils attended the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra concert, under the care of Mrs. Walton, Mrs. Waymer and Miss Judd.

Preparations for Christmas have begun. The children are learning new carols and reviewing the old ones. This is a wonderful opportunity to learn songs that never grow old, and the teachers are working hard to carry over to the children the real meaning and spirit of the carols.

All pupils are on full time, have been for two weeks. The kindergarten is using the auditorium again, the kindergarten room is accommodating two classes, and one class occupies the portable. This has been freshly painted, has new shades and is very cozy and comfortable.

UNVEIL TABLET TO SULLIVANT

Marks Site of First Brick House In Franklin Co.; Ceremonies Tomorrow at 3 p. m.

Several hundred children will be present Friday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, at the unveiling of the tablet to the memory of Lucas Sullivant, Columbus pioneer, at the convent of the Good Shepherd at West Broad street and Sandusky street. The tablet was placed by the Franklin County Pioneer society.

The tablet was placed near the first brick house built in Franklin County. The house now stands inside the convent grounds. It was built by Lucas Sullivant in 1801. The house is in the same condition in which Lucas Sullivant left it except for a few needed repairs.

Sullivant came to central Ohio in 1795 as a surveyor. It was his duty to survey a tract of 6666 acres belonging to Hugh Stevenson, a colonel in the Revolutionary war. This grant was Stevenson's bounty for his services in the war. Lucas received one half the land for his services and in 1797 he purchased the territory on the west banks of the Scioto.

Sullivant died in 1823 at the age of 58 years.

The Christmas class party of the J. R. R. class will be held at Glenwood church Tuesday, Dec. 13. All members are urged to attend and bring a 25c gift to exchange.

Driver Cut by Glass As Car Turns Over

Bruce R. Scott, shoe dealer at Sullivant and Terrace received slight cuts from broken glass early last Sunday morning as his car turned over twice on an embankment between Marysville and Findlay. He was on his way to Detroit when the accident occurred.

The car uprooted a young tree, broke the glass of the windows and crashed the top. Scott with the aid of two farmers pushed the car back to the road. He returned to Columbus. His injuries were not serious.

Prof. Tittle says: "Some people squawk so much that they are often mistaken for a bunch of turkeys at Thanksgiving time. They ought to get it in the neck, too."

Speaking of turkey, all those who escaped the last big celebration have only a few more days until chopping day rolls around again. That's the trouble with the world, just everybody can't be satisfied with having the two days so close together. Pity poor papa in this respect, too.

Downtown coaches should start whipping their basketball team into shape now that the last gun has cracked on the football season. But it's an established fact that a team gets along much better without this type of coaching. We say keep the downtown coaches downtown.

The land that men do shall live after them, the good is often interred with their bones. If Rupert Hughes is right our old friend George Washington turned this maxim aside and not until now has the bad been brought to light. We haven't seen George shaking his monument or visiting Mt. One of the big things that goes with every championship prize fight in the past few years is a lawsuit. The Dempsey-Kearns bout is over without any definite decision but Kearns says he wants another try at the ex-champ. What better publicity could Dempsey want. If this keeps up it won't be long until people will be claiming that Jack is in shape to take Tunney on again.

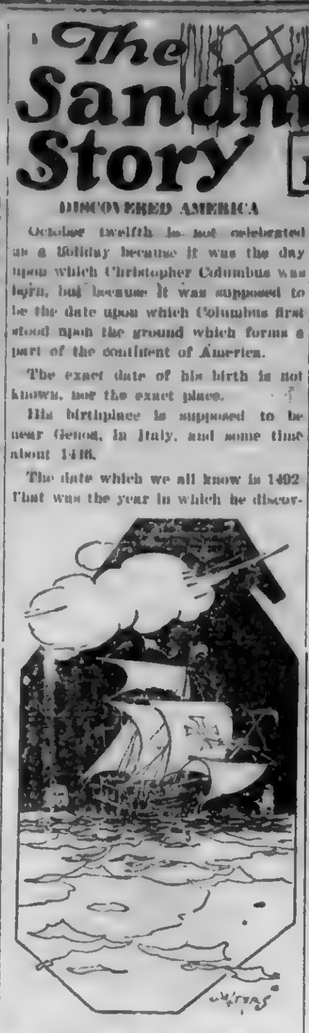
In 1525 Titian painted Alphonso d'Este, Duke of Ferrara, third husband of Lucrezia Borgia. For centuries this portrait was believed to be lost. An art dealer has discovered it and sold it to the Metropolitan Museum for an enormous sum. Now this beautiful painting hangs in the position of honor at the museum. Because the complete history of the canvas is not known, no one can be sure that this is a genuine Titian. However, Bryson Burroughs, curator of paintings at the Metropolitan, has said: "That it is the work of Titian all the critics who have seen it, with remarkable and unusual accord, agree. The noble design is his invention, and no one but he could have carried out in this rich and lustrous color such subtleties of detail, combined with breadth and solidity of form."

How It Started
By JEAN NEWTON

MANUFACTURE OF PAPER

Although the word paper is derived from papyrus, the writing material of ancient people, papyrus is not paper, nor does the making of paper hark back to it. The first genuine paper was made by the Chinese in very early times and introduced by them to the Arabs, and thence to Europe. There is knowledge of making of paper at Samarkand as early as 706 A. D.

By the Arabs the art of turning linen and cotton rags into paper is thought to have been taken first into Spain and then into Italy. The year 1150 saw the establishment of the paper mill at Fabriano, which became the center of a great paper making district. After Italy came France, Germany, and when the Edict of Nantes in 1685 drove French paper makers into exile, England and America fell heirs to the art.



In the year 1690 the first paper mill in America was built at Roxborough, near Philadelphia, by William Rittenhouse. The story of the manufacture of paper would be incomplete without mention of the Fourdinier brothers, Englishmen, who in the early Nineteenth century lost their fortune in the invention of a machine for producing paper in endless rolls, instead of the old individual sheets, a machine which revolutionized the industry and earned for them the titles "the fathers of modern paper making."

The Sandman Story
By Martha Martin

So at Last He Started on This Venture.

DISCOVERED AMERICA

October twelfth is not celebrated as a holiday because it was the day upon which Christopher Columbus was born, but because it was supposed to be the date upon which Columbus first stood upon the ground which forms a part of the continent of America.

The exact date of his birth is not known, nor the exact place.

His birthplace is supposed to be near Genoa, in Italy, and some time about 1436.

The date which we all know is 1492 That was the year in which he discovered America, and for a discovery of that sort it seems only fair and right that we should do him the honor of celebrating a special day for him.

For Columbus was the one who made so many things possible. Perhaps others may have discovered what he did—doubtless in time to come they would have done so—but that is all guesswork on our part. The fact is Columbus did make the discovery, so that since his time the countries upon this continent have accomplished so much that is splendid and amazing.

The parents of Columbus were wool-combers, but they saw to it that Columbus was quite well educated. At an early age he began his ... upon the sea.

We all know of his desires and his struggles to obtain aid to discover a route to Asia by going west. The roundness of the earth meant something very real to Columbus. He puzzled over it, thought of it, saw in his mind the round, round earth and of himself traveled into Asia by another door as it were!

So at last he started on this venture. Partly with royal assistance, and partly with the help of the Zinzons, merchants of Palos, they started.

There were ony three small vessels, the Santa Maria, which was the flagship, manned by Columbus; the Nina, commanded by Vincente Yanez Pinzon, and the Pinta, commanded by Martin Alonzo Pinson, and in all there were no more than 120 men.

It was August 3, 1492, that they left Palos; or, as we have always said in the little rhyme which makes us keep the date of the discovery of America in our minds:

Columbus sailed the ocean blue,
In fourteen hundred and ninety-two.

Whatever dates we may forget, that will somehow always stay in our minds, I think, for not only is there the rhyme, but there is that little picture we can see of Columbus standing in the bow of his small vessel, followed by the two others, and of the water so blue and sparkling and beautiful and smooth.

Columbus took many voyages in his lifetime; he discovered many islands, made for himself a great and lasting name in history, but he never knew he had discovered a new continent.

Always he thought that those places he had touched had been parts of Asia.

And it seems quite sad to think of the times we've been applauded (and often, very justly, too) when we've recited well or played the piano well, or something of that sort, that Christopher Columbus, who discovered America, did not even know of the great deed that he had done.

Never had he any realization that in a new continent would they erect monuments to him, nor that in schools they would give pageants about his trip, his discouragements, his successes.

And his little son, Diego, whom Queen Isabella made a page at the Spanish court, could not boast to the others and say:

"My father has discovered a new continent, which is more than can be said for most fathers, and most people, for that matter!"

For neither did little Diego know, and it has always seemed such a pity.

It would have been a splendid thing for any little boy to have been able to say!

A new machine for transatlantic flying has been invented in New York. It is called the "aero-ship-plane," and is a combined dirigible, airplane and ocean vessel. It flies at the rate of ninety miles an hour, and travels on water at the speed of an ocean liner. When the weather is too stormy for travel it can hang without motion in the air, anchored with the aid of gyroscopes. The plans provide for thirty passengers and a crew of four in one ship.

Nancy's heart gave a great bound. The buoyancy of hope! But she knew that there was a miracle close at hand. It rested upon her own lips. And yet why be silent and render all three miserable?

"A queer mess all around. The impulse of the moment is invariably a plunge for me. Love isn't something you may direct. You cannot say you will love this or that person."

"No," said Nancy.

"The bolt is blind. Often we love where we don't want to love. And that is my misfortune. I wrote her letters, Nancy. I do not know human nature. There is always something fascinating in the unknown. So I wrote her love letters, unsigned, to keep my self in her thoughts until I fulfilled the conditions of the bargain. Nancy, Banister is going to be my home. It is the way out I've been seeking. No one shall rob the poor any more and leave them without redress. Oh I know. It sounds like a boy's dream. But I have the power, Nancy, tremendous power for good. An honest newspaper—There goes the bell! "If you don't mind," he said, "I'll run away into the greenhouse. I want to fend off the denouement as long as possible. I wonder what in the world I'd have done without you, Nancy."

"Nonsense! You're a nice boy, and any girl ought to be pleased to have you around. I'll send for you."

The greenhouse had once been a long, rambling side porch. There were no orchids or potted orange trees; pansies and garden pinks and geraniums and a few roses. This was the doctor's playground.

There was an incandescent lamp at each end of the greenhouse; but where Cathewe sat there was only the dim light of the winter stars.

He heard a door close, then a light scurry of feet on the cement floor. An intrusion. He stood up. A woman was approaching the spot where he stood. No doubt she believed herself alone. She paused suddenly to inhale the perfume of the pinks. When she raised her head he saw who it was.

* * * * * * *

When the limousine drew up to the curb before the Maddox place, Betty did not alight at once. She stared through the window at the little house across the way. She wondered if, with a mother like that, she would have been the victim of her present unhappiness. She did not want laughter, jests, dancing; she wanted to sit beside that beautiful and remarkable woman while she played.

Upon entering the house she threw her arms around Nancy and kissed her; and Nancy complimented her gaily upon the beauty of her gown. And both of them were passing through that singular phase of life which crystallizes the outlook and makes for misanthropy or tender philosophy.

"And she believes I am happy!" thought Betty.

"What shall I do?" thought Nancy. "How shall I act? To tell her that Brand wrote those letters would only add to the confusion, since he has built a Chinese wall between them."

Betty at once became encircled. Laughter began to bubble up in her. She wanted to be alone. It was so funny! She had set forth to wreak vengeance upon mankind for her hurt, and she could not begin even on these!

She could not remember how she reached it, but reach it she did—the door to the greenhouse. She remembered there were camp-chairs somewhere; and she walked down the little alley between the boxes and tubs, peering right and left. Raising her head, she saw the white expanse of a dress-shirt, quite close.

"I thought I was alone," she said.

"You say that with a shade of resentment. I was here first."

"Goodness! The ant-man!" She laughed. There was a note of hysteria in the laughter.

For a little while they stared at the stars—without seeing them.

Here, beside him, like this! And now he never could tell her; she would never know. In an hour or so she would learn the truth; and by her faith in her father she must hate and despise Brandon Cathewe.

Pits; no matter which way he turned he dug them. He became aware of a new twist in the many-faced irony of this adventure. He had risen to power in Bannister by the leverage of her father's misdeeds. Without this capital, the Herald would never have been roused from its moribund state.

Here, her shoulder almost touching his—the woman he loved! And the god of irony had whisked her as far away actually as if she had been transplanted upon Jupiter.

"Jupiter!" he said aloud, unthinkingly.

"And what about Jupiter?"

"Oh, I only want to go there and come back."

"With what?"

"A dream that has, I suspect, flown that far away."

"We do waste a good deal of time—wishing for things we cannot have."

"Do you?"

"I have, naturally, being human, like everybody else. What kind of a dream?"

"The most beautiful of all dreams." Silence.

Still that baffling reserve, she thought. But this time he should not escape. Before they left the greenhouse she intended to ask him point-blank what his name was. A mystery here was utter nonsense.

"Your mother has fascinated me," Betty said suddenly.

"I am quite sure the fascination is mutual. She has done for you what she never does for strangers. You see, I am more or less familiar with her moods. Somehow you touched the flame and passion in her. She caused the musician in you. You sing."

"You were there?"

"Yes, in the study. I apologize for not making my presence known. But I wanted to hear more of your singing, and was afraid you'd stop if I appeared."

"I shouldn't have minded—after the first song."

Mother's Cook Book

FOR THE FAMILY TABLE

A soup is always a good beginning for a dinner at any season.

Oxtail Soup.

Have three oxtails split and cut into small pieces. Fry them until brown in a little suet. Place them in a soup kettle, add two dozen cloves, one-half cupful of onions chopped and also fried; one large carrot cut into dice, one-fourth of a cupful of browned flour. Season with salt and pepper, add two pounds of lean beef with a few dashes of cayenne. Cover with four quarts of cold water, bring to the boiling point, then simmer on the back of the stove or at low heat for three hours. Strain and serve.

Fish Chowder

Dice a pound of any good fresh fish freed from bones. Fry three or four slices of salt pork cut into fine dice, add three onions sliced and six good-sized potatoes also sliced. Cook with water to cover until the potatoes are nearly done, then add the fish and cook until well done. Add half a dozen milk crackers soaked in hot milk and one quart of hot milk. Season to taste and serve at once.

Vegetarian Gravy

Chop one small onion and carrot and brown them in two tablespoonfuls of butter. Dissolve one bouillon cube in one cupful of water, add to the vegetables and simmer for 30 minutes. Strain and thicken with flour and butter well browned, adding a dash of worcestershire sauce and kitchen bouquet.

Gateau de Princess.

Bake a sponge cake in two jelly tins. Cut the center from one cake, leaving a rim one and one-half inches wide. Cover the cake with jelly, jam fresh berries or sliced fruit. Place the rim over the cake and frost the rim or decorate with whipped cream.

Cream of Corn Soup.

In a double boiler place one quart of milk, one and one-half cupfuls of corn, one-half of an onion, three sprigs of parsley, paprika and salt to taste. When hot stir in two tablespoonfuls of flour smoothed with two tablespoonfuls of butter, add to the soup and cook for 15 minutes; remove the onion and parsley and press through a sieve. Serve hot garnished with freshly popped pop corn.

SATIN RADIATES ITS LOVELY SHEEN THROUGHOUT THE MODE

Satin will radiate its lovely sheen throughout the winter mode. In fact, the fashionist is growing more and more enthusiastic in regard to satin. Paris acclaims it not only for daytime dress, but most ardently for evening wear, especialy the white satin frock of classic drape. A gown of white satin recently worn by a Parisienne of high degree, carried a cluster of snowy gardenias at shoulder and hipline as its only adornment.

This being very much of a black and a white season in Paris, it follows that black satin styled with utmost simplicity has become the idol of fashionables for daytime wear. The model in the picture is a representative type of all that is best among high class costumes. Notice that the skirt is tiered and then draped at one side, which is a very popular styling this season.

The other charming gown is beige and it accents the effectiveness of crepe satin used in reverse. This girlish model is two-piece and its satin (shiny side out) skirt has just enough of a flare to be stylish. The blouse cleverly alternates the luster and the dull side of the satin, the little bows supplying the final beguiling touch.

A color that is selling beyond all precedent in satin, is brown, especially chestnut brown and cinnamon shades. As said before, trimming is conspicuous by its absence on these frocks of satin. However, any lack of embellishment is made up for by the intriguing manipulations of the fabric itself. Inset drapes, uneven hemlines, clever necklines and many soft bows tied of the material contribute their charm.

A fascinating feminine aspect is given to those winsome satins, with the use of exquisite lace at wrists or at neck or in a side cascade. One is impressed with the choiceness of the laces employed for this purpose.

The First Christmas

In David's town of Bethlehem,
Land of Judea, far away,
At David's cave in the old khan,
Was born our Lord, that Christmas Day.

O far off town of Bethlehem,
With ridge of hills and cliffs so white,
So strangely labored when he came,
By angels, heralded, at night.

O, Mother Mary, girl so fair,
Among all other women blest,
Who there, where animals were penned,
Held Jesus to your loving breast.

Beyond the gates of Bethlehem
Within green pastures Syrian sheep,
Were watched by shepherds, lowly men,
Whom angels wakened from their sleep.

They came not from proud Herod's court,
Who heard the news on that great day,
But lowly shepherds watching flocks,
Who saw the great Star point the way.

To preach the gospel to the poor,
He came our Savior, Christ our Lord,
Then let us, humbly, voices raise,
And sing his praise with one accord.

Historical Sketch of Glenwood M. E. Church

On Monday evening, March 30, 1893, a small group of persons met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Six on Price avenue, to discuss the matter of organizing a Methodist Society on the Hilltop.

At that time there was no church on the Hill except the Friends' church which had recently been established, and these high-minded Christian folks who met that evening in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Six realizing that the healthful location of the Hilltop would as it was developed, surely attract numbers of Methodists seeking home sites, sensed the need of a church of their own denomination.

After some deliberation a temporary organization was formed.

On April 16, 1893, Mr. W. H. Thompson was chosen class leader with M. O. Randolph assistant.

The class meetings were continued until November 19, 1893, when a permanent organization as a church society was formed. The following officers were chosen. Board of Trustees, Albert Watts, William Harmon, M. O. Randolph, L. D. Gletcher and C. L. Needles.

Stewards, W. H. Thompson, Samuel Six, B. J. Friend, Morris Breese, W. McNabb, G. J. Ashbaugh.

Treasurer, Albert Watts; Financial Secretary, Dr. Howard Whitehead; Organist, Mrs. G. S. Wright; Chorister, T. J. Fawcett; Pastor, W. B. Chadwick.

At the first meeting of the Official Board the subject of building a new church was broached and at later meetings was discussed, but no definite action was taken until at a meeting on March 15th, 1894, a motion to create a new building fund was carried and solicitors were appointed to raise funds.

Meanwhile the church services were held in the little brick school house on what was then Price avenue, the name afterwards being changed to Clarendon avenue. This building later was remodeled and is now used as a private residence.

June 28, 1894, the Board accepted the present site on Highland avenue as a gift from J. H. Bullock, the society assuming an indebtedness of $300. The J. R. B. class in the adult department of our church school is so named in memory of this good man.

Sixteen years from the day the Board accepted this gift from Mr Bullock, on June 28, 1910, the corner stone of our present church edifice was laid.

July 2nd, 1894, Mr. Winfield Scott was elected treasurer of the building fund.

Nov. 25th, 1894, the members of the society held a meeting with Dr. Howard Whitehead as president and Mr Winfield Scott, secretary. At this meeting a committee consisting of Messrs. Six, Breese and Friend was appointed to prepare an estimate of the cost of a temporary church building, dimensions 36x50 feet. The estimate was duly submitted and approved by the quarterly conference after deciding to add six feet to the length of the building. This building was dedicated with appropriate services on Sept. 1st, 1895. At this time of dedication the total membership numbered sixty-five. Few in numbers and not wealthy, but rich in their firm faith in God and with the assurance that God was guiding them, they were enabled through that faith and a sacrificial spirit to soon pay off the church indebtedness.

The parsonage was erected in 1902 and practically paid for the same year.

The Sunday school was organized August 27th, 1893. There were sixty-five present and the collection amounted to eighty-five cents. Five officers were chosen and five teachers were appointed. Our church school today has eight departments, eighty-eight officers and teachers, an average attendance of almost seven hundred and average collection of from thirty to thirty-five dollars.

It is well known that the great influence and success of our church school today is due largely to the enthusiasm, untiring energy and constant faithfulness of our superintendent Mr. C. W. Walton. He has held this office in our school for twenty years, and his wife Mary Riddile Walton has been our church organist for more than twenty-one years.

The Epworth League was organized Sept. 11th, 1894, with Dr. Howard Whitehead, president. The Ladies' Aid society was organized May 7, 1894, with thirteen charter members. Mrs. Richard Hughes the first president.

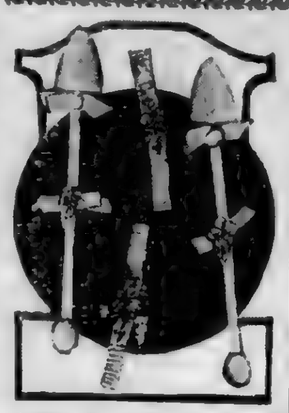
The Junior League was organized with Dr. Whitehead the first superintendent. The Women's Foreign Missionary society has grown from a small organization to one of strength and influence. Two of our own girls, Misses Willo and Ruth Hecker have gone as missionaries to foreign fields.

The Glenwod Auxiliary of the Women's Home Missionary society was formed Sept. 12, 1903, at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Howard Whitehead. Mrs Whitehead may well be named the mother of this society, because she gave so generously of her time, her love and her means to its support and the present splendid efficiency of this society attests the harvest of her sowing. Those who knew her will always cherish her memory. The remembrance of her is as the fragrance of a lovely rose.

It is but proper that we should speak of the one in whose home the church was first organized. No one has been more faithful than Mr. Six. Optimistic when sometimes clouds hovered near, always ready to help to the limit of his time and ability, and it would be difficult to vision Glenwood church without Mr. Six at the door extending the hand of friendship and cordial greeting to those who enter. He typifies our Glenwood motto "The church of the cordial welcome."

Dr. Howard Whitehead, too, should be mentioned in this connection. As a young physician, just establishing his practice here at the time the church was organized, he gave to it the courage and enthusiasm of his young manhood and he, too, has always been the cheerful optimist bearing so willingly even more than his share of the responsibilities connected with the success of the church. Glenwood church owes her prosperity in a large degree to these men and others in the church of like character.

Seventeen years from the time our society was formed we had an enrollment of four hundred and ninety-six members. Today, or thirty-four years after its organization, we have a membership of seventeen hundred and thirty. We have had fifteen pastors. Dr. G. F. Barber the present pastor is entering his fourth year of work among us.



Editor's Note—This sketch of the early history of Glenwood M. E. church written by Mrs. E. J. Chenoweth and read before the congregation, seemed to contain so much of interest to many people of the Hilltop, it was decided wise to publish same in the Hilltop Record.

Radio has recently been used as a means of locating hidden treasure. Some metal lost buried at the foot of a tree on the shore of the Gulf of Mexico has been brought to light by the "radio detector," as it is called. The instrument "is adjusted to announce, by sounds of varying intensity, the presence and nature of hidden metals."

Christmas Remembrances

Among the lovely remembrances which Christmas brings to fair woman, or if it fails to bring, registers disappointment for someone, are dainty garter sets and shoe-trees. Now that the short skirt vogue is placing garters on display, there is a renewed enthusiasm for this item of feminine vanity. Likewise one's shoes must look the prink of perfection these days, which makes shoe-trees a necessity to keep them in shape. The lovely little hand-made flowers which so adorn both garters and shoe-trees, are veritable works of art.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

PASSING OBSTRUCTIONS

Watch two men walking together and you will be surprised to see how many couples, when they come to an obstruction like a post, or a tree, or, perhaps a barrel placed on the sidewalk to cover a temporary excavation, will take care to pass together on the same side. Many men who would scout the idea that they are superstitious will, nevertheless, be extremely careful in this respect. For it "breaks friendship" if they pass the obstacle on different sides.

Primarily this superstition is the survival of what was, to our savage ancestors, no superstition at all, but only a usage born of the exigencies of savage life. Two members of the same tribe, making their way through the dark forest of Northern lands into which the civilization of the Mediterranean shores had not yet penetrated, knew that, lurking about them in the wilderness were savage beasts and no less savage enemies—and they kept close together for safety's sake. To allow even the bole of a tree to interfere between them might mean that one would be fatally attacked before his companion could assist in his defense. For mutual support, for companionship, they instinctively kept close together and instinctively still their descendants turn out of their way to avoid passing on opposite sides of a post. And to this is added a subconscious influence of symbolism—the division between the two should the post be between them suggesting severed friendship.

Joe's Christmas Job

by H. Lucius Cook

Two weeks before Christmas, Joe was slated to be offered a new job, a real position this time. For five years, since he was thirteen, he had worked for a photographer and earning only sixteen dollars a week. It seemed to him that he would remain at that humble wage the rest of his life if he did not get out and do something right away. At eighteen a boy should be making good if he is ever going to—at least so Joe thought—and with a sick father and two younger brothers to help support, he really needed more. So when a competitive firm offered him twenty-five dollars a week, he jumped at the biggest opportunity and resigned his old place.

But Joe was no slacker and although he was "getting through" on Saturday night, the Saturday before Christmas, and though he had to be at his new place bright and early Monday morning, he stuck by his post with his former employer until all the "proofs" were out. That meant hours of slavery, for in the photographic world, practically the whole year's business is done between Thanksgiving and Christmas, and everyone connected with it has to buckle down to work, nights as well as days. Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, none of the men went to bed at all. At five in the morning they would skip over to a Turkish bath for a plunge, and recline on the divans for an hour. But seven o'clock found them back at the studio, developing, drying and retouching negatives, making proofs, and getting them mailed to customers. There can be no loafing on such a job as all the work must be done to order in a short time, and cannot be stocked up.

Joe showed his pluck in sticking with the gang, for the work was hard and no extra recompense went with it. He knew the extra work his pals would have to do if he should quit, and so for them he stuck it out. Such is the Christmas spirit in the shops, behind the scenes, where Christmas joy is made for others overnight, and tired comrades stand in line, too courageous, proud, and loving to desert each other though muscles ache and home ties call. Joe did not have to stay, but did—and got no extra pay except the satisfaction of it all when at ten o'clock Sunday morning the work was finished.

At lunch time Monday noon Miss Meechem of the studio found Joe standing on a street corner and stopped to talk with him.

"How do you like your new place?" she asked.

"I haven't one," he said. And then in answer to her further queries, for Joe was never over-talkative, he added, "The beasts! They said another boy had come last Monday just after I left there, and as he could begin at once they took him on, and had no place for me. I've been to every studio in town, and no one wants me now. It is too late, for after Christmas they have no more work. I don't know what I'll do."

"Do!" exclaimed Miss Meechem. "Do! Why, come right back to the old studio with me where you belong. They need you there. We miss you terribly. They can't pay you twenty-five, but sixteen and a sure thing is better than this treachery. They ARE beasts!"

No one but Miss Meechem could have ever dragged poor Joe back to his old job, but false pride could never withstand her arguments, and a few minutes later Joe was in the office of his former employer.

Mr. Bass was infuriated at the abuse the boy had had, and called his competitor on the phone to tell him what he thought. But first he sent Joe out to work, so that the boy would not hear the complimentary things he had to say, nor the abusive language that he used to his competitor. Then he slipped out of the studio for a few minutes and later that day there was delivered at Joe's door a large, mysterious package, plainly marked "Not to be opened until Christmas."

Joe did not have an increase then, but his job was permanent, and Santa Claus had delivered at his door much better things than he could have bought himself even with the extra pay that he had hoped to have.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

MAKING GOOD THINGS

In Peking, China, there was, and very probably still is, a blacksmith who all his life has fashioned nothing at his tiny forge but donkey bits, simple rods of metal with a ring at each end to which the reins of the patient burden bearers are fastened.

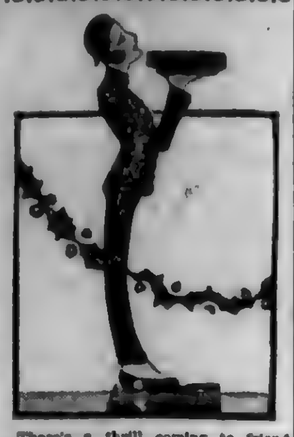
For hundreds of years his ancestors have been engaged in the same occupation. Century after century, son following father, has striven to maintain the reputation of the highest grade handicraft and to fit his product to the craft song which each of them have sung—"I guide the hammer and a king guides the bit."

There is a Chinese saying which originated, I suspect, among that group of Eastern philosophers of which Confucius was the leader, which says: "To make good things is better than gold."

What a wonderful motto for a workman. What a splendid slogan for the man at the bench.

To make a good thing, to seek perfection in the simplest tasks, to study and strive to outdo in your present task all the accomplishments of the past AND TO SUCCEED is more satisfying than any other recompense that can result from our efforts.

One of the bitter things of old age, to those who have honestly striven, is that its weaknesses, its dulling of the human tools, its limitation of effort makes it seem impossible to keep up to the standard that we set for ourselves in earlier days and stronger moments.



After all, there is one masterpiece at which we all work daily, whether we will or not. That is OURSELVES. Whether, when it is finished, it shall be a credit and a source of pride, rests wholly upon the honesty and faithfulness of our efforts.

Do not figure your success altogether in dollars. Do not measure your accomplishments solely by fame. Remember that there is a satisfaction in well doing that money cannot measure and that genius in an unknown cave is no less genius for being hidden.

Sing with the old blacksmith of Peking and keep your eye on his smoke-grimmed motto—"To make good things is better than gold."

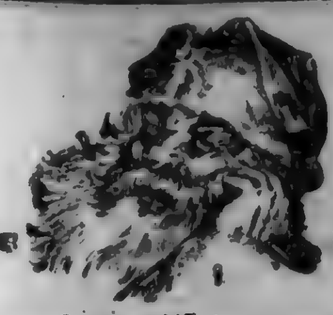
A Smoking Set for "Him"



There's a thrill coming to friend husband or big brother or bachelor-man when he wakes up Christmas morning and finds a gayly attired "buttons" standing at attention ready to serve him during his smoking hours. These wooden figures are sold undecorated, ready for painting. To enamel them, prepare a paint by breaking sticks of sealing wax into little jars of denatured alcohol, letting it stand all night. Paint his trousers blue, his coat scarlet. Brass buttons on his coat, of course! Make them by dropping spots of hot gilt sealing wax along in the row as you see in the picture.

"Trade Your Smiles."

The United States has more than four-fifths of all the automobiles in the world. In 1918 manufacturers exported 3.9 per cent of the passenger cars made in this country and 4.5 per cent of the trucks. In 1926, 6.3 per cent of the cars (288,000) were exported as well as 14.6 per cent of the trucks (67,000). During the first quarter of 1927, .3 per cent of the passenger cars and 21.1 per cent of the trucks were sent abroad. Good roads are fast being built in South America. In March, 1926, 3613 cars were sent to Argentina and Brazil; in March, 1927, 16,225 cars were sent.

Growing Plants in a Sponge

The sponge makes an excellent soil in which to grow certain decorative plants. For a very effective window display soak a large piece of coarse sponge in water, squeeze it half dry, then sprinkle in the openings red clover seed, millet, barley, lawn grass, oats, rice, etc. Hang this in the window where the sun shines a portion of the day, and sprinkle it lightly with water daily.

The sponge soon livens into a mass of living green vegetation very refreshing to the eyes.

The seeds used may be varied, according to fancy, but the above named seeds in a hanging sponge are prettier than a sponge set in a dish or plate, though excellent results may also be obtained by planting other seeds, grapefruit seeds, carrots, etc.

The seeds which produce delicate feathery leaves are the prettiest for indoor plants. Golden millet brings a surprisingly quick result in leaves and decorative "fruit." Sweet clover seed also brings quick results, and has a hardiness not so easily affected by change in temperature as many seeds have. Creeping bent grass seed produces a dense growth and is also very hardy.

MISSION WANTS OLD CLOTHING

Clothing and Toys to Be Distributed to Needy Families by Church Representatives.

The Mission Hall of the Columbus Evangelistic Association, the down town representative of the churches of this city, is in need of clothing, bedding, heating stoves and toys.

This organization besides holding services each night in their hall at 21-23 West Spring street, also sends visitors into the homes of the needy to give them material help as well as spiritual help. For example, this past Thanksgiving day 54 families were supplied baskets full of food and some clothing. Some of these families had as high as 18 members in them and some of these people do not even have shoes, warm clothes for their children, heating stoves for their homes or warm bedding.

One of the visitors, Mrs. Johnson, who lives on the Hilltop, went into a home where a widowed mother was trying to care for her children. The mother could not afford to buy warm clothing for her children, nor even a heating stove to burn up the wood that the children had collected.

Readers of the Record are urged to help in any way possible. The people of Columbus as individuals support this work and of course if the organization has need of anything they come to the people. Anyone having any of the above mentioned articles that can still be used should take them to the mission hall at 21-23 West Spring street or call either Main 4550 or Randolph 2475M and someone will call for them.

According to an estimate of the Bureau of Fisheries, ten million people went fishing last year. Herbert Hoover, head of the Department of Commerce, estimates that each person caught about four and a half fish. No wonder Mr. Hoover is obliged to report that American game fish are steadily decreasing in numbers! The United States Government spends two million dollars a year on hatcheries, but there is such a high infant-mortality rate among fish that this method of replacement does not suffice. "Two years ago Mr. Hoover appealed to fish and game clubs throughout the country to cooperate with the Federal Government in establishing nurseries . . . Fifteen chapters of the Isaak Walton League, 16 fishing clubs, and 5 private individuals have already established nurseries with a total capacity of 20,000,000 fish." Experts say that without this help the annual $2,000,000 spent by the Government would be wasted.

It is now the belief of Dr. Henry Norris Russell, of Princeton, that at least vegetable life exists on the planet Mars. Plant life gives off oxygen, and it has been discovered that there is oxygen in the atmosphere of Mars. There is, however, no evidence that life of any kind exists on any planet of the universe, besides the earth, except Mars.

The Papuans of New Guinea have their fish nets spun for them by spiders. A flexible bamboo stem is stuck into the ground where the spiders are thick. The end of the pole is tied down to the stem, so that a large loop is made, which the spider soon finds and fills with his web. The threads spun by these spiders, which are about as big as a hazel nut, are so strong that the weis make very good fish nets.

WHAT TO DO WITH THE MONEY

Last Thursday the papers carried a full account of the Ohio Stadium being turned over to the state for completed payment and upkeep. The report also gave statement of the financial standing of the stadium indebtedness. This shows that at present there is but $300,000 yet owed on the Ohio State athletic plant, the Ohio stadium.

Athletic receipts will now be used to pay the remainder of this debt. At the rate of attendance in the past few years and the high prices the individual pays for a seat in the stadium at the games there is no reason for thinking the stadium should not be paid for in a short time. If the stadium debt is erased in the next two years the question of what the funds in the future will be used for is one that every one will be interested in.

As yet there has been no definite plan of distribution of the athletic receipts after the stadium is paid for but when we consider the many things the money could be used for to great advantage we see another great benefit of this great concrete structure.

Some people urge that the price of the admission be reduced for the years to come. This may be well considered and weighed and a possible reduction might prove well but at the same time we must consider the great demand for seats at these games and the premium these tickets will be at. This being so the best plan we can see to follow would be to use the receipts for building a new gymnasium for the men, a men's dormitory, and by all means a new auditorium.

In this last the university is at a great disadvantage. There is no building on the campus with an auditorium that will hold over a few hundred people. Graduation exercises are held at the coliseum. Students are not able to hear the best speakers brought to the campus because there are but a few seats and little standing room.

We are of the opinion that this stadium will be a great relief to the state in supplying the necessary improvements for Ohio State University when they are used properly.

Changing Manners

Ignorance of forms cannot properly be styled bad manner, because forms are subject to frequent changes; and consequently, being not founded upon reason, are beneath a wise man's regard. Besides, they vary in every country; and, after a short period of time, very frequently in the same; so that a man who travels must needs be at first a stranger to them in every court through which he passes; and perhaps, at his return, as much a stranger in his own; and after all, they are easier to be remembered or forgotten than faces or names.—Swift

A few of the Seminole Indians of the Florida Everglades are still living independently under a truce with the United States which is eighty-five years old. They have refused to live on a reservation, preferring to keep their own freedom and customs, and avoiding the white man's way of living for fear of the degeneration which has taken place in many Indian tribes when they have become civilized. They design their own clothes—ruffled costumes for both men and women, with heavy bead collars for the women. They administer justice under their tribal law, and find their own food in the swamps which are still well stocked with game and fish. Until recently, they held Negro slaves, descendants of those who had escaped to the Everglades before the Civil War. The draining of parts of the Everglades with the increasing settlement of Florida is said to have made the Seminoles consider giving up the old truce and yielding to United States jurisdiction.

Glenwood M. E.

One of the happiest and most impressive services of the Christmas month is the White Gifts service at which time the church and Sunday school join together in keeping the birthday of the King by giving White Gifts of loyalty and love. This service will be held at 7:30 next Sunday evening. A beautiful Christmas pageant "The Bethlehem Inn," will be presented under the direction of Mrs. Deunen Leach. At the close of the service the various classes and departments of the school will present their White Gifts which will go toward the two great Methodist institutions, the children's home and the home for the aged and also for local needs. This service will be in charge of Mr. C. W. Walton, superintendent of the Sunday school.

The following people will take part in the program: Edna Keefer, Dorothy Hammerstein, Mr. W. L. Roller, Harold Smith, Charles Edwards, Charlene Ren, June Simmons, Burrel Drake, Richard Hemmerly, Ardis Lee, Mary Krejci, Dorothy Dye, Louise Compton, Harold McGlauhlin, Emerson Harlow, Russell Bender, Leroy Patzer, Howard Nichols, Mr. Longmire, F. K. Dickerson, Mrs. F. K. Dickerson, C. E. Johnston, Mrs J. E. Allison, C. E. Clark, C. H. Campbell, Gerald Johnston and Mary Rudolph. The music will be in charge of Mrs. C. W. Walton. The Junior High chorus will sing.

"Upon the Midnight Clear," a program based on "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," was presented at Glenwood church on last Sunday evening. The scene was a Christmas eve during knighthood days. A squire was to keep his vigil and on the next morning was to be made a knight. During the night he left the altar to help a wounded man and thereby lost his chance to become a knight. The king entered the chapel at this point and it was found that David, the young squire, was the long lost son of the king who had been stolen many years before. The man who had taken David away from the altar had kidnapped David so that he might prove his worthiness as a future king.

The program was directed by Miss Mary [illegible]man who was ably assisted by Mildred Phalor, Annis Turner, Mrs. Grover Wooding and William Huffman.

This program which was the second of the Christmas Festival month's programs at Glenwood.

The door opened, and the Maidor' itinerant butler—the caterer's son—announced that dinner was served. As they reached the door, Betty turned upon Cathewe swiftly.

"I am Miss Mansfield, as you know. And you are—"

Nancy herself saved the situation. She caught Betty by the arm and drew her aside. She turned to Cathewe.

"Miss Stoddard is waiting for you."

He nodded and hurried off.

"Betty, here is something I want you to read." Nancy put into Betty's hand a sealed envelope. "Under no circumstances open it until you are home. After you read it, telephone me what you think of it."

Betty folded the envelope and hid it in the bosom of her gown. She went into the dining room, angry and confused. Once seated, she saw that her unknown cavalier was directly opposite.

"Mr. Morrison, who is the gentleman opposite?"

"You don't know him? He is Brandon Cathewe, the editor of the Herald."

"I had pictured him quite a differ ent sort," she said, evenly. "Will you present him before we leave the room?"

"If you wish it"—distressed.

The introduction took place after the other guests had left the dining room.

CHAPTER IX
"Mansfield Comes Home."

Betty and Cathewe stood alone, facing each other for a moment.

"Suppose we return to the greenhouse?" she suggested.

He led the way, closing the door gently. "I have tried to avoid this moment, but it was inevitable."

"Why do you hate my father?"

"I do not hate him. We have different ideals."

"I was just beginning to like you!"

"And now?"

"Oh, I don't know! Something dreadful seems to have happened to me. Has my father ever wronged you or yours?"

"No."

"Then why do you attack him?"

He was silent.

"I love my father, and he loves me. He will not stoop to defend himself from calumny. Different ideals! My father has made this city prosperous. What have you, an outsider, done?"

"Not an outsider, just an outcast," he answered.

"Well, I'll give you a surprise. After January first you will no longer direct the policies of your despicable newspaper."

"And what miracle will happen to prevent me?"

"It has already happened. At this moment, I control the majority of the stock." The level quality of her tones was Mansfield-ian—cold and implacable.

As he was trying to comprehend the significance of this there came a series of rumbles like thunder in the distance. The greenhouse trembled, and there was a crisp tinkle of falling glass. Instinctively both of them wheeled and stared through the glass at the sky in the east. They saw it grow lurid then sharply ruddy.

"The munitions," he gasped. And ran toward the door.

When the cub reporter fell in a faint on the paper-littered floor of Cathewe's office, Cathewe became affected by a strange tightness in his throat. He fell to musing upon the elusive human attribute called loyalty.

"Say chief," he whispered, "there's something I've got to tell you."

"Well, what have you done?"

"The other day they sent me on a fake interview with Mansfield. Of course, I was kicked out. So this morning I cut out all the news stories and editorials concerning him and mailed them to Miss Mansfield, with an unsigned note that everything was true. Well, the moment I dropped the stuff in the post office, I got cold feet. I tried to get it back, but there was nothing doing. I'm horribly sorry."

"Not an Outsider, Just an Outcast!" He Answered.

"So am I," said Cathewe gravely.

"All right; I'm fired."

"No. What you did to night squares that. You're going on the payroll at twenty a week. There's a taxi for you below."

Cathewe called to the city room for someone to help the boy to the cab; and as soon as this was done, the harried editor fell to pacing.

The old man of the sea was still on the shoulders of Digby Hallowell's son, he thought. He would have to start all over again, somewhere, somehow, thanks to the efforts of Miss Mansfield. He would sell the little home and turn back the proceeds to his mother. And what would she do—return to Florence or follow his future fortune?

"Ah, Matthews!" he cried, as a man about his own age came in. "Give me the gist of it. I've been holding up the editorial page for two hours."

"Five dead and forty-seven injured. The biggest story that ever struck this town, Mr. Cathewe, and there is a phase to it I just don't know how to handle. I want your view first."

"What is it?" asked Cathewe.

"Mansfield and that stunning girl of his. That girl goes sailing out there in her dinner gown and turns her big limousine into an ambulance, and makes twelve trips to the hospitals.

"The place was totally wrecked. Four tanks of T. N. T.—you know we had four separate fields of them, so that if any accident happened to one field, the others would be immune—the four fields exploded simultaneously. The girl is in the city hospital—"

"Hurt?"

"No. Just watching at the side of her father's cot. Seems Mansfield was out there inspecting the work on the pipeline when the place blew up. He wasn't touched, but he hung around, giving orders."

"But the hospital!"

"I'm coming to that. What he did was as brave a thing as might happen in France. One side of his face will be badly scarred and his left hand crippled. Dashed into a blazing shack for three slav kiddies that had been deserted by their terror-stricken father. Coming out, the door frame fell upon him. But he staggered through, into the safety zone. He was badly burned, but the kiddies escaped with nothing more serious than singed hair."

"And then?"

"Not a sound from that crowd! First-off, that struck me as rather hard and cruel. But I got the rights of it shortly. Stunned. When they awoke, he was on his way to the city hospital. Looks to me, chief, as if our capital has suddenly been wiped out. We can't jump on the old free-booter hereafter."

"Thank God for that!" said Cathewe. "I'd like nothing better than to go up there and shake his good hand."

"Then the lid is off?"

"Squeeze all you can out of the story. Let the town realize that Dunleigh Mansfield has come home."

"Here's the real climax. The girl carried eleven men to the Good Shepherd. When she got there with the twelfth, there wasn't room. So she had to take the man to the city hospital. She saw to it that the man was given the best aid obtainable. When they had got him all swathed up in cotton, she chanced to turn toward the next cot—and there lay her father!"

Cathewe caught his star man by the shoulders and pushed him from the room. He himself had work to do. He sat down and wrote the editorial which was talked about long after the fire was forgotten. This editorial was headed: "Mansfield Comes Home."

CHAPTER X
The Truth.

Betty, who had slept in the chair beside her father's cot, spread out the Times and with heavy eyes scanned the black headlines.

"Daddy!" she cried, exultantly. "You're a hero! The whole town is talking about your deed. Listen." She began reading the account.

"What paper is that?" he asked.

"The Times."

"Get a Herald and see what that paper has to say."

She obtained one and opened the newspaper to page four. "There is an editorial here," said Betty.

"Read it to me."

When she had done—with a voice that had been strong at the beginning but which presently lost its resonance and broke frequently toward the end—the paper slipped from her hands to the floor and she stared across the row of cots.

"I don't understand," she said, addressing nobody in particular. "Daddy, I bought the controlling interest in the Herald yesterday morning. And last night at Nancy's I told Mr. Cathewe that his successor would be appointed in January."

The light in Mansfield's eye broke into many little points, and the lids met him?"

"Twice accidently. He remained unknown until last night. He—he said he warred against you because your ideals were different."

"That was sportsmanlike. What do you propose to do with the paper?"

"I don't know now. I don't suppose I had any plans mapped out for the future. I just wanted the attacks against you stopped. He says you have come home. What does he mean by that?"

White Velvet Competes With Tinted Tulle for Party Frocks

Which shall it be, that new party dress in planning for the near-at-hand yuletide festivities? Shall it be fashioned of classic white velvet styled with exaggerated simplicity, or shall it be fashioned with frothy, billowy tulle with bouffant skirt fluttering out just like the airy fairy dresses that fairies wear in story-book pictures? Truth is, you pay your money and take your choice," and when all is said and done you will have won the approval of Dame Fashion without question.

The picture shows two widely different types, and the one is as modish as the other. White velvet has captured the fancy of the elite as a medium for the formal gown. Not only is it favored material for opera and dance dresses but it is much beloved for the bridal robe.

This clinging supple fabric is usually made up with classic simplicity, attention concentrated on artful draping. The model in the picture accomplishes its graceful lines through adroit shirring done in semicircles which climax in a series of graceful drapes at the hip. Silver embroidery at neckline and girdle blends exquisitely with the soft sheen of the velvet.

When Dorothy Cullivet, that clever star who is shining so brightly in the firmament of screen actresses, made her appearance at a recent social gathering, she danced her way straight into the hearts of her many admirers. By the way, have you ever given thought to an evening gown of bright orange-colored tulle? Well, Miss Cullivet did, and had it made just as shown in this picture, which shows her good taste, for the effect of all-yellow tulle is enchanting. However, tulle for the evening frock may be white or flesh or black, or in pastel tints, according to the mode's degree, and in every instance it registers sprightly charm and fascination.

Referring again to the frock of white velvet, there is a growing enthusiasm for pure white for evening wear. The idea is being carried out to the extreme, with results that are enchanting. For instance, either a white satin or a white velvet dress, draped to perfection, is apt to give placement to a cluster of snowy gardenias at the shoulder and at the girdle as its only ornamentation.

In the matter of snow-white tulle frocks, so popular for the younger set, many of these are worked with silver thread and tiny "diamantes," until the gown looks as if it were created for a lovely snow queen.

The idea of making a semi-fitting bodice of white satin with a very bouffant skirt tiered in many ruffles is conspicuously featured in party-frock styling this season.

The all-black tulle gown vies with that of all-white. An effective way to supply color to the black tulle-skirted evening gown is through a wide crush girdle of soft satin in vivid colors or pastel shades. This usually envelops the hips, until at one side it develops into a generous graceful drape which drops to achieve the fashionable dipping hemline.

Pastel colored satin slippers are the latest note with evening gowns, either of tulle or of velvet.

Christmas Candies at Weber's

Exposing a Funnel Secret

The simple funnel usually lies hidden in the utensil drawer, and is used so seldom that it is dusty when the occasion arises for it to be taken out to assist in pouring into a small necked bottle or jar. There are daily uses for the funnel, however, and one of them is its practicability as an egg separator. The white of the egg quickly drops into the dish below, leaving the yolk intact at the funnel neck.

Many housekeepers find the funnel an excellent mold for salads. A domestic science teacher originated a new cake by placing a funnel in the deep cake dish upside down. When the cake is baked a graduated hollow is left in the center to be filled with whipped cream or gelatin.

The funnel also serves as a pastry decorator in the emergency, and in the event occasioned by the breaking of the glass percolator top, a funnel placed upright over the center spot will prevent the coffee from flying into the air. The sides of the funnel will drop it back again into the pot.

Protection to Satan is now legally given in Poland. A priest was tried in a Bromberg court for preaching an irreligious sermon, in which he "denied the existence of the devil." "Y" School Awards Letters to Day School Team at Close of First Season.

A full sports calendar is scheduled for this year at the Y prep school in contrast to the necessarily limited program of basketball and tennis last year when the school was just being started. Presentations of letters and numerals were made by Coach Riley and C. V. Kendall, principal of the day school, at the first annual foot ball banquet.

H. E. Townsend, Ohio Commissioner of High School Athletics, told the boys in his address at this football banquet of the vital importance of careful and consistent training. He said that most of the athletes who were unsuccessful in later life or who died prematurely were men whose training had been either of a prefunctory sort or unbalanced.

Mr. Townsend congratulated the boys for the record they had made during their first season during which they met Gahanna, Grove City, Mt. Sterling, Worthington, St. Charles, St. Mary's and Groveport.

Speaking of the passing of the roughneck in athletics, Mr. Townsend said that the majority of the 170 high schools in Ohio playing competitive football during the past season reported a surprisingly small need for disciplinary action.

Informal talks were given by Charles M. Roudebush, director of the Y. M. C. A. schools on "The Why of the Day School for Boys;" Coach Duke Riley on "The Team;" Waldo Walker, captain, on "The Season," and Robert English of the sports department of the Columbus Dispatch on "Sport and the News." Charles E. Stalley, headmaster of the Y. M. C. A. Day School for Boys, was toastmaster.

"I'll mull it over and tell you what I think of it this afternoon. You run along home and climb into bed.

"I am tired. But there is something I—must tell you—before I leave. For more than three years I have been receiving letters. Love-letters, daddy. I can speak now, because the affair has come to an end. When I go up to the house I shall destroy those letters."

"A writer—with a little money," whispered Mansfield, his gaze directed toward the ceiling.

Betty arrived home and went to her room. As the maid was helping her to undress, a crumpled envelope fell to the floor. Betty suddenly recollected that it was the letter Nancy had given her. She started to rip open the end, but desisted. Both her body and mind seemed drugged.

"Call me at one promptly," she said, as her head touched the pillow.

Four hours later she awoke, refreshed and saw the mail on the bed stand. She reached for it. Fate decided that she should open the large envelope first. Newspaper clippings. She caught a single line in the top clipping—"The Lord of Polygon Hill Is Always Safely Within the Law."

One by one Betty read them, now burning with fury, now cold with implacable hate. She came to the last clipping. It was the story of an inventor whom her father had betrayed and permitted to die a pauper; a terrible narrative of the ruthlessness of business, of the callosity of self-interest. And yet she knew it could not be true.

The truth! To whom might she go? Not to her father in his present critical condition. . . . Maddox! She flung herself out of bed and ran to the extension telephone. Yes; he could give her a few minutes, but he was hard pressed. Finally he arrived.

She pushed him into a chair and laid the clippings on his knee. "Read them," she said.

He pretended to glance over them. "Yes; all these things are true, little lady. But what your father did last night cleans the slate, in the eyes of God as well as man. You baby! Don't you dare sit in judgment on your father at this moment."

"And I—I have misjudged Brandon Cathewe?"

"I'll tell you. A few hundred years ago he would be wearing a surtout with a dreuss on it and he would be outside the wall of Jerusalem. I loved that boy. I wish God had given me a son like him. And your father admires him secretly. He tried to avoid you because he didn't want you to know him as he is. It would have made you doubt your father. You have met his mother. He couldn't be very bad with such a mother. He misjudged you, too. He thought you had deserted France, that you were only a giddy butterfly."

"Whereas—I am an ant. Who is he, really? From where does he come?"

"There's only one way to find that out. Go to his mother."

"Go to his mother," repeated Betty, dreamily. "But I am keeping you from your patients!"

"I'm mighty glad you called me in. I don't know who could have mailed you those clippings, but he's done a fine service for us all. Good-by, little lady. And remember!"

After the doctor had gone Betty remained motionless for a space. A new thought had occurred to her. Brandon Cathewe. She would give him back his newspaper. Having come to this decision, she returned to her room. It was then she espied once more Nancy's letter. This time she opened it.

She had to approach a window to decipher this scrawl: "From George Cottar to Nancy Maddox, his friend."

It came to her, upon this second perusal, that the handwriting though in pencil, was strangely familiar. Then she came upon a little cross where a period should have been.

There fell upon her senses a roaring like the falling of mighty waters. Until this died away, she was powerless to move. When she could impart mobility to her feet; with her heart fluttering wildly she ran to the precious Florentine box. She opened a letter and laid it beside the sheet of manuscript. The same hand had written them both.

Immediately she flew out of the house and rushed off to Nancy's.

"Oh, Nancy! Where can I find him?"

"You want father?"

"No, no! I want George Cottar—the man who wrote those letters!"

Nancy led the way into the living room and stopped only when she reached a window from which the street was to be seen.

"What do you see from this window?" she asked.

"From here?" I seem to be very stupid, for I don't see anything."

"See, then, that temple of fine dreams and music—the little white house with the picket fence. For the man who wrote those letters to you, and George Cottar, and Brandon Cathewe—they are one, Betty. Why don't you go over?"

"All right, I will," answered Betty and with the impetuosity of ardent youth she again dashed out of the house.

Betty crossed the street, opened the gate and latched it behind her, and approached the fateful door.

It was December 23; there would be a rush for Christmas flowers at the Alpha Floral rooms that day; and the girls were already busy getting the windows cleaned and re-decorated.

"How did Miss Anne say to put these poinsettias in the east window?" asked Ardus Ellington, who was helping out during the holidays.

"The old girl said to graduate them," answered Jane Duncan, who was "regular help" at the shop. "Of course, with you, a college studs, graduate means to turn out—to finish up. That's what I'd like to do with these flowers—finish them. I'm so tired of them."

"I'm afraid you don't love flowers," voiced Ardus. "I do."

"You would," retorted Jane, who liked for everyone to think her sophisticated if not depraved. "I like the little old coin I get at the end of the week; and it's little enough, believe me. But come here, innocent, and I'll show you how to graduate the posies. Park the shortest ones next the glass, the taller ones next and so on—like this—" and she placed four plants in to illustrate. "Better water them first, though."

Ardus saturated the black sand in the flower pots, and carried other pots from another room while the others drained a bit.

Miss Anne called from a workroom at the rear, and Jane answered the call, while Ardus worked at the window. Just as Jane returned with an armload of made-up flowers to box, Henry Von Hagen came into the shop.

"I better take him: he's a regular," said Jane in an undertone; and she dropped the orders on a table.

"May I help you, please?" she asked, demurely enough.

"Some poinsettias, I think," answered the man, and Jane led the way to the table where Ardus was working.

Henry looked at the plant Ardus was lifting for the window. He also looked at the girl.

"This is a beauty," he said, looking at the girl, though he indicated the plant. "I'll take this one, and these two," he continued, selecting other plants. "Then I'd like to have some of the cut blossoms—which the botanist tells us aren't a blossom at all. Beautiful enough, however."

Jane went before him into an adjoining room, where he selected two dozen of the cut flowers with stems of varied length. Back in the office he gave the address; wrote a check in payment; and left the shop looking at Ardus Ellington.

"That nut's sayin' it with poinsettias, I'd say," remarked Jane, going back to packing the flowers.

"I'd say a prince instead of a nut—if I were getting the flowers," smiled Ardus.

"Well, I'll say the way he lamped you would indicate that he'd say 'princess' to you, innocent. Why'n't y'u flirt a bit?"

"Who is he," asked Ardus, ignoring her question.

"Head engineer at the Public Service or something. Name's Von Hagen. His old man's a professor Ardus Carried Other Pots From Another Room.

here for years—romantic languages. Y'u ought to know him. Maybe you've had classes under the old gink."

"I think I do know who he his: but I have no classes with him till next year. But who were the flowers for?"

"Getting inquisitive already?" asked the girl teasingly. "Well, he's sending them as a Christmas present to his mamma," she said, accenting the last syllable.

The conversation was stopped by a customer, and for the rest of the day a busy stream of happy shoppers ran in and out of the shop.

Miss Anne was wrapping some poinsettias for the girls: Ardus selecting some violets for her coat collar: and the Christmas greetings were being exchanged at the same time. Jane exclaimed:

"Well, I gotta beat it. My sweetie's takin' me to the Orpheum tonight. Suppose you're goin' to one of the big 'Y.-W.' parties that some of the professors' wives are throwing for the orphan studes?"

"Yes, and I'm mighty thankful for a chance to go to a party. It's pretty nice, when one must be away from home at Christmas. The funny part is that there are three parties, and none of us knows to which party he's going—or at whose home the party will be. We are to be called for and are to ask no questions. Isn't that thrilling?"

"Twould almost startle a turtle, don't ya know. Well, good night; don't do anything I wouldn't." And Jane was gone.

Ardus enjoyed the "crunch, crunch" of the snow under her feet as she hurried to her boarding house, where she removed the supper from the oven where her landlady, Mrs. Julien, had left it. That lady was helping at a church bazaar, and since Ardus was the only "left-over" student in the house, she had told Mrs. Julien not to bother about her.

After a hurried and rather lonely supper, Ardus bathed and dressed with much care, and then came down to sit in the cheer of the grate fire. Three candles burned in the center of the big window.

"Sweet of Mrs. Julien to burn one for me along with hers and Bob's," said Ardus.

She wondered what the folks at home were doing, and tried to visualize every member of the family. Perhaps they, too, would burn a candle for her. When she became a little homesick, she stroked again and again her shining nails. She stood looking into the center of a huge ponisettia on the table. She remembered a dream she had had the night before, and that she had not remembered till that minute; but just then an auto horn sounded outside.

She hurried into her coat and hat, pulling on her gloves as she went down the steps. Some one she didn't know was coming up the walk. He turned, after greetings, and they went together to the waiting car.

$112,233,400 ON OHIO ROADS

Good Roads Association Says This Amount to Be Spent in 1928.

At the eighteenth annual convention of the Ohio Good Roads Association held last week at the Neil house, W. A. Alsdorf, executive secretary said that aproximately $112,233,400 would be spent for road building and improvements in the state during 1928.

Of this amount the state and federal governments will furnish $11,500,000, the counties $10,000,000 and $1,000,000 will be raised from taxation of the property owners, to be used for resurfacing, reconstruction, maintenance and repairs. The revenues for construction from the state will reach $30,555,000.

George F. Schlesinger, state highway director of the highway department in his report to the meeting said that for the five years beginning with 1927 the state expense for road work would be near $100,000,000. This amount does not include bridge or grade crossing construction or maintenance. From 1905-1926 there was approximately $202,000,000 spent for road improvement in the state.

It was found that fifty-one pounds' pressure was necessary to break an eggshell in a test made at the Bureau of Standards of the Department of Commerce. To crush a piece of timber one foot square required two hundred tons' pressure. The machine used in making the tests was so precisely adjusted that it crushed the eggshell without hurting the membranes inside.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"CATERWAULING"

This term, frequently used to describe a tumult of harsh noises, is assumed to refer, of course, to the cries of cats. And while it is true that this association enters into its significance, there is far more to the word than that. There is a story in its origin.

"Caterwauling" is English for "Katzenmusik" (cat music), which is the German translation of "Charivari," the name of a well-known institution of French rowdyism of former times.

"Charivari" described the hubbub and uproar produced by the noise of pots and pans and dishes mingled with bawling and shrieking which was designed to express dislike or disapproval of the person against whom it was directed. During the Middle ages in France a charivari was frequently raised against people marrying the second time, the widow particularly being hooted by the masked participators who usually had to be bought off to give the victims peace. The same thing happened at weddings where the mating was considered unequal because of great disparity of age.

"Charivari" existed under different names in many countries in Europe, sometimes taking such violent form that military interference was necessary to put it down. In the Fourteenth century the church threatened punishment and even excommunication to people participating in such demonstrations. Later charivari took on a political significance, as during the Restoration in France. By that time, however, the world had advanced to the stage where the attacks and violence began to take intellectual rather than physical form, the medium being the public press. Indeed, a paper called "Charivari" was established in Paris in December, 1832, with the avowed purpose of satirizing the happenings of the day. From this came the German "Katzenmusik" and the English "Caterwauling."

WINTER CAMP FOR SCOUTS

Will Be at Ro-Fre-La Scout Reservation From Dec. 27 Until Dec. 31.

A real winter camp, giving Columbus Boy Scouts a chance to camp and hike and do all of those other myriads of things that make winter the most enjoyable period of the year, has been scheduled for the 200-acre Ro-Fre-La Scout reservation, 20 miles north of town, during the Christmas vacation.

From noon on Tuesday, December 27, until noon on Saturday, December 31, this reservation, which national Boy Scout and Red Cross directors have classed as one of the best of its kind in the country, will be thrown open to one hundred local Scouts for a session of camp, the like of which they have never before attended.

For five years previous to this the Columbus Council has conducted winter encampments. The first of the series, held in December, 1922, at Potter's cabin near Worthington, was the first camp of its kind in Ohio. This was followed by a trip to Camp Johnson, at Flint, and then three Christmas vacations were spent at Ladder Lodge, a cabin located at the top of Jacob's Ladder in the hills south of Lancaster, donated to the Scouts by Edwin S Burdell.

This year it was the decision of Scout officials that the winter camper should go to the Ro-Fre-La reservation for their annual trip.

Uley Morris, the caretaker, has been busy for several weeks remodeling the big mess hall and transforming it into an ideal cold-weather lodge. Walter H. Richter, Columbus contractor, is the donor of quite a bit of the equipment which, when installed, will make the big assembly hall into a fine winter hang-out, capable of housing more than one hundred campers.

Scout Executive Edwin J. Bath, who is to supervise the running of the Winter Camp has announced his staff of leaders, the largest and most capable that has ever conducted an Ohio Winter Camp.

Phil B. Weaver, who has headed up the last two Winter Camps and who has directed the summer camp at Ro-Fre-La for three years, is to be camp director. Grant O. Graves, Scout Executive and Scoutmaster of Troop 28 of North Broadway M. E. church is to be quartermaster. Activities and campfire programs will come under the direction of Bill Knepper, acting field executive and director of campfire entertainment and Indian lore at Ro-Fre-La last summer.

N. W. Scherer, professor in the department of agriculture at Ohio State university and an expert forestor is to be camp naturalist, conducting a program of winter-time woods lore.

POINSETTIAS AND PRINCESS

"Warmer in front," he said, helping her into her seat. The car skidded now and then on the icy streets. And Ardus had no more than buttoned her coat collar high around her neck, being careful of the violets, than the driver said:

"Here we are," as he drew up in front of a large home and stopped.

He assisted Ardus to alight, walked to the steps with her, lifted his hat and said "good night."

"Good night—and thank you," answered the girl.

Ardus went up the broad steps and rang the bell. Henry Von Hagen opened the door.

"Good evening," he said cordially, taking her hand. "Mother, this is Miss Ellington."

"I'm so glad you could come. Go upstairs to the first room you come to."

When Ardus came down the steps she was met by Henry, who led her into a big living room. Poinsettias were grouped in the big old-fashioned bay window. Gazing into one of the flowers, Henry said:

"You know, I had the queerest dream last night."

"So did I," joined Ardus.

"I dreamed," continued Henry, "that I went to the opera, and when the curtains were drawn—"

"There was a huge poinsettia on either side of the stage," interrupted Ardus.

And when the orchestra played 'Dreams of Love' a—" attendants, and so on," interrupted the girl again.

"How in the world could you know what I dreamed?" asked Henry. "But you do; and a princess stepped out of the other bloom—a princess with as many attendants and ladies-in-waiting as there were persons with the prince. They began a—"

"A march to music toward the center front of the stage," said Ardus.

Henry's countenance revealed surprise, excitement, incredulity; but he continued:

"How could you know what I dreamed—I didn't even remember it myself till I looked at that flower. But they did march toward the center front of the stage. And when they met, the prince kissed the princess, and she put her arms around his neck—"

"And you were the prince," said Ardus.

"And you were the princess," finished Henry.

Their lips met; her arms were about his neck; his arm encircled her waist. Some one in another room laughed aloud. Then Henry and Ardus saw that they were under the mistletoe.

Unabashed, Henry said:

"I've been looking for you always, dear; when will you marry me?"

Ardus replied:

"Yes, I knew yesterday that you were the one—and then that dream—that proves we belong to each other—"

"Of course, I've dreamed of you always—but when will we be married?"

Just any time you say, dear."

Christmas Candies at Weber's

OPPORTUNITY

By Evelyn Gage Brown

It isn't the man who tells you
How everything should be done;
Who points out this one's failure's,
And jibes at everyone.

Who boasts how he'd have done it,
And criticizes the way,
The Doer of Deeds is working—
Who counts in the world today.

It's the man who's in the struggle,
Whose face is grimed and worn,
Who keeps on fighting bravely,
Though battle-scarred and torn.

He may fall—but gets up gamely,
And, striving, never heeds,
The ones who sneer and slander,
But dares to do the deeds.

He gives himself, unsparing,
And never counts the cost;
But knows the joy of fighting,
Although his cause is lost.

To him belongs the credit,
And the victor's laurels, too;
For the world today is needing
The man who dares to do!

Did Without Music

The choir at the Swedish mission at Muskegon, Mich., did not sing during a revival campaign. Because the members were dressed in fashion, with short skirts, rouge and bobbed hair, they were forbidden by the evangelist to take part in his services.—Indianapolis News.

Hilltop to Welcome Christmas With Community Sing

Carolers to Sing to Shutins Over Hilltop

Mr. David Rohe, director of the Hilltop Lutheran church choir, will direct the mass singing at both Hague and Broad and Park and Broad street in the big community sing on Christmas eve.

Arrangements have been made with C. J. Kohn to take all calls from the shutins who wish carols sung before their home. As this may be quite a task, it is requested that calls be made between the hours of 9 a. m. and 6 p. m. Friday. Call Randolph 1225, and give the street and number where you wish carols sung. Please make the explanation as brief as possible and be accurate in your street numbers.

Carols to be sung during the evening include "O, Come All Ye Faithful," "Holy Night, Silent Night," "Joy to the World," "Little Town of Bethlehem" and "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear." The songs will be printed on slips of paper and passed out at the sing.

The following organizations and choir leaders have signified their willingness to co-operate with the business men to make the community sing a huge success:

St. Aloysius, Mr. Mitchell, leader; Glenwood, Mrs. Mary Walton; Hoge Memorial Presbyterian, H. C. Biddle; Hilltop Lutheran, David Rohe; Hilltop Church of Christ, Mr. Reed; Hilltop Crest Baptist, W. E. Knox; Burgess Avenue U. B., Mrs. Martha Price; St. Paul's United Evangelical, Miss Helen Snider; St. John's Lutheran, L. O. Pearch; Community Church, Rev. Walter Weiland; Ogakomta Campfire Girls, Highland Avenue school, Miss Mary Baker; Unatitandi Campfire Girls, Glenwood church, Mrs. Grace Wymer; Hilltonia U. B., G. W. Hamilton, and Warren Avenue Nazarene church, Mrs. Florence Keller.

St. James Lutheran Mission heartily in favor of the plan but owing to their Christmas entertainment falling on that night they will be unable to take part as an organization.

The entire Hilltop has been divided into nine sections and assignments to the different territories will be made at 5:30 Saturday evening, all leaders being requested to meet on the front steps of West Broad school at this time just prior to the sing at Broad and Hague.

The territory has been divided at follows:

North of Broad St.

Wheatland avenue to and including Eureka avenue.
Eldon avenue to and including Hague avenue.
Valleyview and Prospect.

South of Broad to Sullivant

Lechner to and including Clarendon
Wheatland to and including Eureka
South Terrace to and including Hague.

South of Sullivant,

South Park avenue, east.
Eureka avenue west

One group will cover the territory west, beginning with Powell avenue, both north and south of Broad street.

RELIEVE CROWDED SCHOOL CONDITION

Three storerooms at Harris and Sullivant Aves. were rented by the school board on Monday afternoon to take care of the overflow at John Burroughs school.

These rooms will seat approximately 240 pupils. This relieves the crowded condition at the school until the addition that is under construction can be used. Until now there have been many students who have been allowed but half-day session in classes but this new arrangement will provide all-day classes for them.

The rooms will probably be ready for classes when school is resumed after the holidays.

Ministers Convene

When the annual state convention of the ministers and members of the Church of God in Ohio is held here on December 27, 28, 29 there will be about 300 in attendance. Rev. R. C. Caudell, Middletown, and Rev. C. Byers, of Springfield, will speak at the meetings.

Miss Ruth Shockey, 263 S. Terrace St., had for her guests at bridge tea Wednesday in Lazarus' tearoom Mrs. Morris D. Ervin of Washington, D. C.; Miss Rhea McLaughlin, Miss Wendall Lilley, Mrs. L. M. Garrette, Mrs. Walter Carroll, Mrs. Norman McCoy, Miss Maude Davis and Mrs. Eula R. Harris. The affair honored Mrs. Ervin who is visiting her mother, Mrs. F. M. Hauer, 368 Oakley Ave. For the same visitor Mrs. Harris, Alhambra Ct., will have a dinner Friday, when guests will be Miss Shockey, Mrs. McCoy, Miss Davis, Miss Julia Smith, Miss Anne Cornell and Miss Ruth Cotterman.

Mrs. F. A. DeLong, of 113 N. Powell Ave., was hostess to the members of her embroidery club on Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 14, celebrating a Christmas party. The members exchanged their gifts in a most unique way; each one being given a color, then finding their packages which were concealed in a Christmas tree. ART INTEREST AT Y SCHOOL

Johnson Says Pictorial Art and Illustration Universal as Dramatic Urge.

Apparently interest and ability in that fundamental pictorial art, illustration, is almost as universal as the dramatic urge. This opinion was voiced by Rex M. Johnson, dean of the Y. M. C. A. downtown school of commerce as he studied the enrollment cards of the first students in the new classes in applied commercial illustration which he is inaugurating in his school this term.

Coincidentally enough the alphabetical classroll shows that the scope of daytime business interests of the first registrants range from "A to Z" with E. A. Lupfer, N. Park Ave., who, as the last name on the roll, happens to be the Zanerian college vice president. The man whose name is first on the list was the "A" being advertising man.

Other professional interests represented in these new illustration classes are salesmanship, nursing, window trimming, draftsmanship, teaching and professional advertising art. George A. Whisner, art director of the Terry Engraving Co., has discontinued the private classes which he formerly conducted at the Pen and Pencil club rooms and is confining his teaching to these Monday and Friday evening classes.

Work given in the commerce school's art department also includes classes in show card and poster design, taught by Earnest Wood. This "old line" course is consistently popular.

CAMERA CLUB AT "Y" SCHOOL

Charter members of the new Camera club organized recently at the Columbus Y. M. C. A. day school for boys, include Walden Dupuis, 186 S. Burgess Ave.; Harry Orr, 3015 Crescent Drive, and Justin Pinney, 246 N. Ogden Ave.

The club meets each Thursday morning to exchange photographic experiences, compare negatives and experiment with various kinds of exposures and subjects. Motion pictures of the last foot ball game of this season taken by one of the students were shown at the last meeting.

Plans are being made for outdoor work this spring.

Move Offices

Pavey-Johnson Co., developers of Westgate district, have moved their offices from 2836 W. Broad St. to 5 Westgate Ave. They are now located in the new brick building at the corner of West Broad street and Westgate avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Durban and daughter Geneva, 270 S. Ogden Ave., entertained at a dance with those as guests: Mr. and Mrs. Raphael Carroll and daughter of Camp Chase; Mr. and Mrs. Carl Durban, Hilliards; Mr. and Mrs. William Helmlich and daughters, Mr. and Mrs. John Durban, Black Lick; Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Krieger, their son and daughter, Camp Chase; the Misses Ruth Esther Clemmans, Alton; Esther Porterhart, Fort Hayes; Elsa Krieger, Emma Elsa, Alma and Clara Durban, Mr. Emery Hamilton of Orient; Mr. Ralph Wood, Harrisburg; Messrs. Melvin Krieger, Ellis and John Kaufman, Camp Chase.

AMMONIA FUMES NOT BAFFLING

A leak in the condenser head gasket of the refrigerator at the Buckeye Products Co. plant caused firemen to be called to help settle the escaping ammonia on Friday morning.

Firemen cut a hole in the roof but to no avail because the fumes continued to pour out. To stop the fumes it was necessary to shut off a valve but the valve was in the district of the leak and was not easily reached. Gas masks of the firemen were not able to hold out the ammonia fumes.

Then R. J. Caudy, 295 S. Ogden Ave., a refrigerator repair man, arrived at the scene of the disturbance, donned one of the gas masks and entered the room, turned off the valve and turned the job over to the repair men. He explained that it was easy to breathe in the ammonia fumes after one gets used to it.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Jones, 29½ N. Wheatland Ave., will leave Saturday morning for Venedocia, Ohio, where the will visit during the holidays.

The glorious Christmas season has caught the spirit of the Hilltop, the season of the year when "Peace on earth good will to men" reigns in every heart and all are exerting themselves to the utmost to make their fellowman happy.

What could be more appropriate than the mingling of all the people of the Hilltop in a glorious get together the night before Christmas to welcome the day of days—the birthday of Christ our King?

For this purpose, that the people of the Hilltop may express their happiness in singing Christmas carols, arrangements have been made for two great community sings and the singing of carols to the shutins on Saturday evening, Dec. 24, in which the choirs and members of the different churches of the Hilltop and other organizations have enthusiastically consented to co-operate with the members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association, who are sponsoring the movement.

Two large Christmas trees, each nearly 20 feet high, will be set up, one at Broad street and Hague avenue and the other at Broad street and North Park avenue. These trees will be decorated with lights and tinsel and will present a beautiful and inspiring sight to the many passersby.

At 6 o'clock Saturday evening, Dec. 24, everybody on the Hilltop, both young and old—men, women and children—are asked to meet at Broad street and Hague avenue for the singing of carols around the big tree. This singing will last for 30 minutes, when the different organizations will be divided into groups and travel by auto over an allotted territory on the Hilltop singing Christmas carols to the shutins.

These groups will reunite at Broad street and North Park avenue at 7:30, with those who do not accompany the groups, for another mighty sing, which will last for a half hour.

SALESMANSHIP FOR WEST HI STUDENTS

To Work in Stores During Holiday Rush for Salesmanship Practice.

Pupils of the salesmanship class of West High school, under the direction of Miss Harrington, supervisor of the work, have entered several stores during the holidays, in order to gain experience.

The students will take with them grade lists which their employers will grade according to the kind of work which they accomplish.

In order to be a finished salesman or saleswoman, it is necessary for the pupil to learn a "line" of sales-talk. This includes knowing the history of the article which he is to sell, the method of manufacture, and the ingredients or the materials which are contained in it. In the salesmanship class, each pupil talks to another student, who represents a customer, and who asks numerous questions about the article to be sold, which the salesman is required to answer clearly and intelligently.

Pupils taking places in stores during the holiday season are: Harry Clark, Herbert Suver, Ronald Howard, Wanda Harper, Elsie Little, Mayburne Martin, Dorothy Williams and Virginia Campbell.

Mr. Raymond G. Hill returned Monday from Southern College Y. M. C. A. Graduate school, Nashville, Tenn., to spend the Christmas vacation with his parents, 435 S. Ogden Ave.

BETHLEHEM

The stars still shine o'er Bethlehem,
As when the Lord Christ came.
Yet in the dark street lingers
The radiance of His Name.

Hearts still beat in Bethlehem,
And tired hands toil on;
Yet, from the town of Bethlehem,
His peace is not all gone.

HERE AGAIN

The small child says there are only two more days until Santa Claus comes. The merchant chants, "Two more shopping days." Carolers everywhere prepare for the big sings. And the turkey gubbles, "It won't be long now."

The significance of the whole affair is that the long looked forward to day of the year is nearly here again. It is Christmas time.

For the past month all the world has been preparing to celebrate this great day. And when we come down to our own little corner of the world we look back and see how the Christmas season gradually came to the Hilltop. Windows began to carry Christmas decorations early in the month and gradually the holly, pine and fir trees came and with them Santa Claus himself has been roaming the streets of the Hilltop. This has been a big season for the merchants and in return they have given the Hilltop people the biggest selections and values that have ever been present here.

And the Hilltop is again in the Christmas season and is entering into the real Christmas spirit.

NOVEL HUNT AT SCHOOL

Have Bag-Worm Hunt at John Burroughs as Nature Project.

Everyone knows something of rabbit and duck hunting, and even of expeditions to the wilds of Africa for big game, but did you ever hear of a bag-worm hunt? This is what the 6A class of John Burroughs school, with their principal, Miss Daisy Charters and their teacher, Miss Watts, held as a nature study project.

Armed with step ladders and pocket knives, the pupils inspected the trees and shrubbery around the school building for this very harmful insect, which tucks itself away in a bag hanging to a twig for its long winter sleep. It was found that the pussy-willow trees were the favorite abiding places for the worm.

The interesting discovery was also made that these caterpillars have the ability of hanging their bags so firmly to the twigs of trees or bushes, that they cannot be pulled off without breaking the twig to which they are fastened, but must be cut. Exactly one hundred bag worms were "bagged" on this strange hunting trip.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

DIVINING BY BOOKS

A rather common practice with those who "seek for a sign" is to open the Bible at random and find their answer in the passage upon which their thumb rests as they part the leaves. In pagan times this divination was accomplished by placing the finger at random on a passage of Homer, Virgil or some other great author. Virgil was an especial favorite in this connection and the practice of consulting him continued down to modern times, though the Bible is the book generally used.

During the Middle ages the historic Virgil became so enveloped in a mist of tradition and superstition that he was alluded to by the uneducated as "Virgil the Wizard"; and in the unpopular estimation the chief value of the Aeneid was an oracle. As late as the time of Charles I the Bible had not entirely supplanted the Aeneid for purposes of divination, as is evidenced by the well-known story of how that monarch learned his fates by the "Sortes Virgilianae," as it was called.

This practice of divination by books is said to have "originated in the respect and veneration of certain books arising from their wisdom and reputation"; and it is easy to comprehend the psychology which induced the people of the Middle ages to consult "Virgil the Wizard" and leads men of a superstitious trend of mind today to turn the Bible into an oracle. But the incipiency of the idea dates back to the first introduction of letters when, to the common mind, there was something supernatural in the power of a few marks made in a certain way to convey from one person to another not merely ideas but whole speeches, word for word; a feeling which is displayed today by remote tribes of savages when they see, for the first time, the use of the printed or written word in communications.

WINTER CAMPS HAVE FEATURES

Good Eats, Adventures, Skating and Skiing for Camp Ro-Fre-La.

A new feature of Columbus Winter Camps, a department of camp and trail-craft, is to be directed by a nationally known figure, James W. Stuber, well-known big game hunter, who has made several trips to Labrador and northern Canada and Alaska for the Ohio State university museum and for other natural history societies, has arranged to be present to demonstrate the how and why of North woods camping. Among other things he is to discuss packs and packing, explaining the famous diamond and squaw hitches and teaching the campers the proper way of doing things in the out-of-doors. He is planning to tell some of his adventures in the North woods, while the scouts are gathered around the campfire.

One of the biggest features of winter camps conducted by scout headquarters in previous years has been the meals. Real good food, the kind that "he-men" eat, and plenty of it has been the custom. This is not to be changed now, for with the engagement of Louis Dandridge as camp chef, scout executive Bath made ample provision for good eats. Dandridge, who was a member of the cooking staff at Camp Ro-Fre-La last summer, has lined up a menu which promises a multitude of good things. It is his suggestion that scouts who wish to reduce their waist-lines had better not attend the camp.

In lining up his program for the five days, Weaver has aimed at actual rugged camping, giving the Scouts an opportunity to learn to make packs and hike under actual conditions. In addition to this he has arranged a schedule of winter sports the like of which is seldom found south of Canada. Skiing and ski jumping is to hold forth on the big hill at the west end of the reservation. At the top of the hill a big ski start and chute is being built so that the scouts may be able to get the real thrills of mountain ski jumpers. A twelve-foot toboggan has been purchased and will be faced at the disposal of the campers.

Arrangements have been made to have the water left in the big natural swimming pool so that the boys are to have a surface for ice skating sixty foot wide and more than three hundred yards long. Ice hockey and "shinney" tournaments are scheduled for several of the afternoons.

Among the other games will be the famous polar bear hunt, the dart throwing, checker and chess tournaments and the buck saw, axe and knife throwing and cross-cut saw contests. Every camper is taught the use of the buck saw, the two-man crosscut and woodsman's axe.

The moonlight hike to the haunted house, the popcorn and marshmallow roasts and the midnight initiation into the Order of Voyageurs, a winter camp secret society patterned after the voyageurs, hardy pioneers of the North, are only a few of the activities that make the boy scout winter camp stand out.

Local scout officials are extending every effort to make this camp the best ever. Mr. Bath in his message to his field of scout leaders struck the keynote of the camp when he said, "We are anxious to give every boy scout a chance to attend this camp for we want them to find out what the pioneers discovered many years ago, that 'he who has not camped in winter has not camped at all.'"

The Sandman Story

By Martha Martin

Mrs. Cathewe came forward and with that interpretation insight which was the quality of her genius, gathered the girl in her arms.

When they were seated upon the divan, Betty locked her fingers tightly and began:

"I did not know until last night that he was the editor of the Herald. I was very stupid through it all. Then last night at Nancy's the truth came out. I was hard and bitter to him. I did not know then that my father—"

A hand flew toward her lips. "You shall not say it!" cried Mrs. Cathewe. "Your father was magnificent last night. You should have heard sonny praise you both. He was happy over it."

"Happy?"

"Yes. A phase of his task has come to a happy ending. We can leave Bannister now, content."

"Leave Bannister?—because I told him that after January he—No, no! He shall have his newspaper back.

"Did—did he ever tell you about some letters he wrote to me?"

"Yes. Between sonny and me there are no secrets."

"Did he mean what he wrote?" asked Betty, miserable with shame.

"With every drop of blood in him; with every fiber of his manhood!"

"Where did he first see me?"

"He saw you in London one night, at the Savoy restaurant. The following afternoon you went aboard the same ship."

"I knew it! I knew that I had seen him somewhere. He didn't know who I was?"

"Not at that time."

"Just saw me?"—in wonder.

"Just that. He went to your father the next morning and asked if he might pay court to you. Your father looked upon the affair as a great joke, not being able to gauge sonny. He made a sardonic proposal, and sonny accepted it. He was to come to Bannister and make a name for himself. The newspaper presently became an obligation; and recognizing that, he saw that he must give you up."

"I understand. I searched the crowds for him. I studied every new face I saw, strained my ears for mannerism. And even now, but for Nancy, I'd never have known!"

"I tried to make you love me." There was a pause. "The name of Digby Hallowell will mean nothing to you; but your father would recall it. My husband was a thief, Betty, and he died in prison. A thief—the most unforgivable kind."

"And shall my father sit in judgment on sonny's?" asked Betty quietly. "But go on."

"I was born in the South; but at the age of ten I was taken to Europe by an aunt who saw that there was music in me; that I possessed interpretative genius. My parents were dead. I studied in Paris, Berlin, Leipzic, Vienna. All the masters said that I had a brilliant future. When my aunt died, the annuity which supported us ceased automatically, but most of the beautiful things you see in this room fell to me. I had enough for the necessaries of life, and a little amusement besides.

"Somehow I had lost America. I was in the Volksgarten in Vienna one afternoon when a very handsome man in the early thirties sat down in a chair near me. Some children were playing nearby. One of them stumbled and fell, and the stranger sprang to its assistance, brushing the bruised knees. 'Poor little codger!' he said in English; and at once I knew that he was an American. I was alone in the world, eighteen, and bubbling with romance. I met him again and again.

"Oh, I loved him. He was charming. He was mad about children; he was genuinely fond of music, painting, books. And his love for me was one great, honest thing in his life. It wouldn't have been so hard otherwise.

"We were married,' continued Mrs. Cathewe. "Sonny came. There followed four wonderful summers. Digby would arrive in May and go back in October. The crash came the fourth winter. He was arrested for selling bogus oil and mining stock. He caught pneumonia in prison and died before I could reach him."

Betty reached blindly for the speaker's hand, found it and pressed it strongly.

"Years passed. When he was twenty I told sonny the story. I told him what his name was, for we were then using the name of Cathewe. I added that if he so willed, he could live all his days in luxury, have all his whims gratified. He replied that he wouldn't use tainted money, and thereupon gave the money to a banker with a plan to disburse it to the poor. Eventually he became a reporter on one of the great newspapers, and discovered that he could write. A month each summer he spent with me; he was at work on his second novel when he saw you."

CHAPTER XI
Understanding.

The telephone buzzed in Cathewe's office.

"Hello!" he called, rather grateful for the diversion.

"This is the city hospital. Mr. Mansfield wants to see you immediately. He instructed me to emphasize the importance of this interview."

"Tell him I shall be up as soon as I can get a taxi around."

"To Shake Hands!" Cried Cathewe.

At the hospital Mansfield greeted Brandon tersely and grunted an order. "In my coat at the foot of the bed is a long envelope. Open it."

One glance confirmed Cathewe's suspicions. The envelope contained the complete history of the trial and conviction of Digby Hallowell.

"Well?" he said calmly.

"Ready to admit that I hold you in the hollow of my hand?"

"No."

Cathewe tapped the envelope. "Do you call this fair?"

"You're an odd young man! You came here originally because you thought you loved my daughter. What was the main idea, anyhow?"

"You mean, regarding the money my father left? To give it back to the poor. To make the newspaper a bulwark between your kind and mine. To build a great hospital, endowed, to which the poor from the ends of the world might come and find aid without cost. A great free dispensary where the unfortunate woman might also find succor and not be callously sent back to the gutter with her baby. The newspaper to doctor their minds and the hospitals to doctor their bodies. To rebuild their faith in humanity; to make American citizens out of them. Shall I put this envelope back in your coat?'

"No. She sat there in that chair all night, holding my hand. Toward morning she slept. I was in a good deal of pain. It was very still. I fell to thinking. Instead of counting sheep jumping over the fence, I looked myself over, from your point of view, from her point of view, if it should happen she learns the truth. I did not summon you to threaten you. Still I had to test you. Your chin is still up, and that's the sign I needed. I don't want that envelope. Destroy the stuff. Make Bannister your home; build your free dispensary. What I really wanted was to have you take my hand."

"To shake hands!" cried Cathewe, figuratively swept off his feet.

"Why not? I needed a licking and you were the only man in the world who had the courage to attempt it. I'm no fool. I know men. I want to be the friend of a man, who, in these hard, matter-of-fact days, has the courage to walk where angels fear to tread. A smile accompanies that, but it's not visible to you on account of those bandages. A curious idea thrust me into that shack last night. Oh, yes; I saw the poor little tikes, and was glad to save them. But that isn't it. I fought you because I was afraid of you. You were a menacing wedge between me and my daughter. On the day she learned the truth I might lose her. Nothing else matters now but her love. She is extremely imaginative. A deed like last night's would appeal to her. She would always have that moment to throw into the scales. She has opened all the doors of my mind and my heart; I can see and hear. Yesterday I would not have understood you; today I do. There's another secret in that envelope. You overlooked it. You are Cottar, the novelist. But I am offering my hand to the son of Digby Hallowell. Will you take it?"

The strength of the hand that closed over his caused a flash of stinging pain. The wince had puckered the bandages.

"You understand?"

"Yes. She has made all these things possible."

To be concluded.

Some men think they're helping the boss a great deal by watching their competitors' advertising and telling him how much better the other fellow's advertisements are.

Hats With Matched Handbags Emphasize the Ensemble Theme

The spirit of the ensemble has completely captured the mode. If it isn't the artist leather-worker devising handbags to match our footwear, then it is the milliner who "takes up the cue" of establishing a relationship between something and something else, say a scarf, a bag, a belt or a kerchief, complementing, of course, these accessories with a matching chapeau.

Among the newest "set" are hats and bags made of felt. Sometimes the very ambitious buy patterns which are easily available, and make their own hat and bag sets. If one happens to be clever at stenciling, or pyrography, or can paint and embroider, there is all the more incentive to undertake to make these matching accessories at home, for felt is being worked in just such ingenious ways. Here's a timely hint for the felt bag—be sure to get a frame of bone or shell or some similar combination, for they are more fashionable than those of metal.

Our illustration features several very attractive matching hats and bags.

The same gold lace and filigree passementerie which appears on the dressy black velvet toque at the top of this picutre to the left is repeated on the flap of its accompanying hand bag which is also of black velvet.

The hat and bag set to the right at the top of the group is a French creation. An all-over patterning of soutache braid distinguishes this ensemble.

Georgeous gold and multi-color brocade ribbons shows up handsomely in the set shown in the circle below.

The designer of the hat at the left center in picture chose to create a very unique compose of scarf, perhaps shawl, more properly speaking, and hat. This fetching set sounds a Spanish note, not only in the flowery embroidery which appears on both hat and scarf, but particularly in the ball fringe which dangles from the edges of the scarf. The embroidery accents true Spanish coloring on a background of black crepe.

Now that sheer velvet is so fashionable, handsome hat and scarf sets are made of this material. A very striking ensemble for formal afternoon and matinee wear includes a helmet of black velvet which is embroidered in rhinestones, the ends of the blackest velvet scarf repeating the same sparkling ornamentation.

For sports wear a felt hat has insets of batik silk. This is accompanied with a kerchief square for the neck, made of matching batik.

Valuable Minerals Are Found in Raisin Bread

It may not always be convenient to make a yeast-raised dough when you want raisin bread. Everybody likes raisin bread once in a while, however, and the raisins contribute valuable mineral elements to the diet. A very good bread can be made by using baking powder. It will dry out more quickly than yeast-raised bread, so it is well to make only as much as you are sure will be eaten promptly. The United States Department of Agriculture furnishes the following directions for making it:

Quick Raisin Bread

Three and one-half cupfuls flour, one teaspoonful salt, four teaspoonfuls baking powder, one-half teaspoonful cinnamon, one cupful milk, four tablespoonfuls melted butter, four tablespoonfuls sugar, one and one-half cupfuls raisins, chopped, two eggs.

Sift the salt, cinnamon, flour and baking powder together. Beat the egg and add the milk and sugar. Combine the liquid and the dry ingredients. Stir in the raisins until well mixed. Place the bread in a greased pan and let it stand for 10 minutes. Bake at a moderate temperature (about 350 degrees Fahrenheit) for about 45 minutes.

SAUCES FOR FISH AND MEAT

A fish, though well cooked and attractively served, is to the average person without appeal, unless accompanied by a good sauce. The garnishing, too, has a great value.

To serve with broiled fish try:

Cucumber Sauce

Grate fresh-peeled cucumber and drain off most of the liquid, add salt, vinegar, a little onion juice and red pepper. Another is prepared by adding one-half cupful of whipped cream, the grated cucumber, salt and cayenne and vinegar to taste.

Sauce Tyrollienne

To three-fourths of a cupful of mayonnaise add one-half tablespoonful of finely chopped capers and the same of parsley, one finely chopped gherkin, and one-half can of tomatoes stewed and strained and cooked down to two tablespoonfuls. Serve with fried fish.

Egg Charlotte

Soak one and one-half tablespoonfuls of gelatin in one-third of a cupful of cold water, dissolve in one-third of a cupful of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice and one cupful of orange juice and pulp. Chill in ice water, when thick beat with a whisk until frothy, then add the whites beaten stiff and two cupfuls of whipped cream. Mold and chill.

Oyster Sauce

Heat one pint of oysters until plump, using their own liquor. Remove the oysters and prepare the sauce, using one-fourth of a cupful of flour, one fourth cupful of butter melted and well mixed, then add one cupful of chicken broth or milk and the oyster liquor. Cook until smooth, add the oysters and serve with fish or on toast as a luncheon or supper dish.

O. S. U. SHOWS LARGE INCREASE

Registration Reaches 10,183—Increase of 8.6 per cent Since 1926.

The official report from Miss Edith Cockins, registrar of Ohio State university, shows the exact enrollment at the university to be 10,183. Last year there were 9377 students in attendance. This year's figure is an increase of 8.6 per cent over last year's figure.

The combined attendance of the summer quarter and the fall quarter is 12,055.

Five years ago this fall the attendance at the university was 7914. It has shown a steady increase since that time. The increase in the five years has been 28.5 per cent.

The college having the greatest gain is that of veterinary medicine. Its gain has been the largest comparatively but it still remains the smallest college on the campus. There are 94 enrolled there this fall and 54 a year ago.

Despite the lengthening of the courses and more rigid standards the colleges of pharmacy and dentistry continue to increase in enrollment. The figures for the dentistry college is 281 and for pharmacy 231.

The largest college of the university is that of liberal arts. There are 2271 students registered in this unit. The college of commerce and administration has an enrollment of 1787; agriculture, 764; law, 307; arts-education, 105; applied optics, 34; education, 682; engineering, 1562, and graduate school 749.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"CAT O' NINE TAILS"

The whole idea of corporal punishment is fast going into the discard. Yet we still hear children threatened on occasions, with the "cat o' nine tails," for centuries the accepted medium of punishment wherever whipping was the order of the day. As late as the first half of the Nineteenth Century, we are told, in our own navy, delinquent sailors were lashed to a gun and whipped with the cat o' nine tails. In the parlance of the sea, this form of chastisement was jocularly known as "Marrying the gunner's daughter." It was only in 1850, when congress abolished corporal punishment, that this practice ceased.

For the origin of the form of the "cat o' nine tails" itself, we must go back further to the days of the Inquisition, that prolific progenitor of methods of torture and abuse. In those days it was the conventional weapon of the jailor and the executioner, its strands numbering nine, because the number nine was credited with having supernatural powers in bringing about confessions and repentence of offenders!

The Sandman Story

By Martha Martin

LIFE OF HERRING GULLS

"First," said Harry Herring Gull to Billie Brownie, who had come to call on him and who was sitting by the edge of a great river, "I was a little olive-gray egg. I was spotted with black.

"I mean, of course, as doubtless you understand, that the egg which later became me, was spotted with black. That is not the way, perhaps, I should talk, but it's Harry Herring Gull's way.

"And if I'm not smart in book knowledge and in schooling and in talking and in all such ways, I'm smart as a gull, and gulls are smart.

"Oh yes," Harry Herring Gull continued, "for years and years there have been gulls.

"Some of my ancestors were here when the Indians owned the country.

"Oh yes, we have always been about, making our ways fit in with the ways of others, which is always wise.

"Indeed I Do," Billie Brownie Answered, "But Do Tell Me More."

"I am here now for the winter. I was born in an ugly little home.

"But that didn't make any difference. We fly about rather than stay by nest of weds and any kind of nest-building trash.

"Our homes are in hollows in the ground. I had one sister and one brother who came out of their eggs at the same time I did.

"We were covered with down and we could swim and run and were considered pretty smart little herring gulls.

"Of course all herring gulls in that way are alike. They're all smart, but the mothers say the same thing over and over as each new group of downy gulls begin to swim and run:

"Aren't they smart little gulls?"

"I am here for the winter, as I said You will notice that my head and neck are grayish brown in color. In the summer I wear a white suit with a gray cloak and I have touches of black and white for style.

"My summer costume is gayer and brighter than my winter costume, which I think is right.

"It is nice to see creatures put on their light clothes in the summer. Don't you think so, Billie Brownie?"

"Indeed I do," Billie Brownie answered. "But do tell me more about yourself."

"As you can see, I have a yellow beak with a red spot for a beauty mark.

"And my eyes are yellow. My feet are a pretty pink color.

"When I was a little fellow I had a pink beak, too, with a black spot.

"But of course the colors I now have, show that I am a grown-up herring gull.

"For we do not get these colors at first. The older ones dress differently from the younger ones.

"When summer comes I go further north. Of course a few members of my family stay around here—but they are the ones who do not care about summer homes or little homes of any sort.

"They're not the home lovers among the herring gulls. For we love to build our nests and have our homes even though we don't care to make them beautiful. We don't care to make them beautiful because we like to fly away from them a great deal and have adventures.

"But we like to have them just the same. Yes, we like to build our nests and have summer homes.

"Cack, cack, cack, that is the truth."

And Harry Herring Gull flew off

HERE AND THERE
By C. C. H.

The sight of mistletoe always reminds an old maid of what might have been.

• • • •

The beverages commonly used in alcoholic circles are for the most part full of life but last week a man in our town poured a bottle of the coveted liquid over the dead body of his comrade and not a whimper came from the man in the box. The satisfaction of being pickled in alcohol may have been his.

• • • •

What to get dad for Christmas is again being solved with a wonderful selection of neckties and handkerchiefs. Betting odds have it that the old man will receive at least two or more ties and a dozen or more handkerchiefs than last year's harvest gave him.

• • • •

Prof. Tittle sez: "You can just about tell when a young feller is in love by the kind of a Christmas present he buys his girl. If he intends to marry her he will give something worth while that will remain in the family."

• • • •

Hog calling contests are quite popular over the country at present. They may lead some parents to realize the likeness of their voices while in the act of calling the children to dinner.

• • • •

What care we for jail riots or dethroning of European monarchs when we are privileged to sit in a huge oval and view the rivalry between two Western conference foot ball teams.

• • • •

Lives there a man with a soul so dead, who to the world this day has said: "Is the new Ford out yet?" All the world is telling how surprised and delighted they are at seeing the long awaited product of this great manufacturer.

• • • •

Ford spent $1,300,000 for advertising in daily newspapers over the country for five days they carried displays of the Ford announcements. Four hundred thousand dollars was spent in addition by the Ford dealers. This is another working slant of the man who puts out the little car and does things on a big scale.

• • • •

Statistics as to the cost of the Christmas dinners to be served in this country show that they will average from $4.50 to $7.70 for the family. This of course is for the families that are comonly referred to as the middle class. No figures have been compiled as yet to the number that will have no Christmas.

• • • •

Congress is at it again. Everyone has been sworn in but Smith and Vare in the Senate and most of the swearing there seems to be directed at them. The House has heard what Coolidge wants in the way of money for the expenses of the government for the year and already they are playing up to the people with several proposed tax cuts. They are playing the little game they always play before they go collecting on the people.

MAKING GLOVES OF COLD CREAM

Preparatory to spring house cleaning a good protection for the hands should be considered. Many women do not like to wear rubber gloves for all kinds of work and yet they are exceedingly fond of pretty, well kept hands.

In housecleaning, the dirt gets imbedded into the tissues, around the nails, and under them, defying subsequent washing. If cold cream is thoroughly rubbed and massaged into the fingers, under the nails, and on the entire hand before any cleaning work is done, and the excess of cream wiped off at the end of the day, all dirt will come off like magic in warm water and soap, to which a little soda or a few drops of ammonia have been added.

The woman who drives her own car is often a fastidious woman who likes [illegible] at the end of a journey, even if she has to change a tire on the road. If the simple precaution of massaging cold cream into the fingers before starting any dirty work has been made, the grease and dust will drop away like magic on a good washing, without the use of strong cleaning powders or pumice stone which is otherwise necessary when the hands have been plunged into grime and grease.

SCOUT CAMP ON NEW YEARS

Troop 21 to Have Three-Day Camp at Troop Cabin Near Flint

A New Year's camp will be held for Troop 21 with headquarters in the Hoge Memorial church. The camp will be held at their cabin near Flint. It will last from December 31 until January 2.

Camp fire stunts are being prepared for New Year's eve. Ice skating and other winter sports will be attractions of this camp. Scoutmaster R. C. Kadel announced that a barbecue is to be held before the open fire on New Year's eve.

On account of the deteriation of the present floor in the dining room of the cabin the scouts are building a new floor in that room. The old floor was the original one left by the pioneer who built the cabin.

A big attendance from the troop is anticipated for the winter camp.

The Christmas pageant, "The Holy Story in Pantomime," given in the Burgess Avenue U. B. church Christmas night to a large audience, is to be repeated Sunday night.

This decision is the result of an unanimous demand of those present at the other presentation, and many requests from others.

The pageant is in nine scenes, depicting incidents surrounding the Nativity of our Lord.

BOX SOCIAL AND DANCE

Residents of Valleyview Will Officially Open Community House Thursday Evening.

Tuesday night will mark the official opening of the Valleyview Community house when residents of the Valleyview addition and friends will gather for a box social and old time dance.

The community house is one the residents of the addition can justly proud of and the organization back of the project is unique in that a member must be a resident of Valleyview.

The building itself is well adapted to community gatherings, the main part or auditorium being a large hall, x feet, in which all community gatherings and social affairs may be held.

Construction of the building was begun about two months ago and means more to the Valleyview residents than just a building wherein may be held community gatherings and entertainments, for there is not a resident in the community that has not done some actual labor on the building, thereby enabling them to erect the house at a minimum cost.

Miss Evelyn Knox is spending the first half of her Christmas vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Knox, 133, Hoon Ave. On Thursday she will leave for Cincinnati to be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Knox of Avondale.

Mr. George Umbaugh, 44 S. Ogden Ave., is spending the holidays in Chattanooga, Tenn., the guest of relatives.

The Elite Embroidery Club enjoyed a pleasant Christmas party at the home of Mrs. J. W. Rees, 204 N. Warren. After an exchange of gifts, appropriate refreshments were served by the hostess. TEACHER TRAINING School Will Be Conducted by Hilltop Churches From Jan. 16 to 20.

A community training school for Sunday school teachers will be held Jan. 16 to 20 inclusive by the churches of the Hilltop in the Glenwood Methodist church. Rev. A. C. Baughman, pastor of the Hilltop Lutheran church, has been appointed dean of the school.

Four courses will be offered, covering general phases of Sunday school teaching. The school will be a standard school, giving credit courses leading to a diploma from the International Council of Religious Education.

Such a school has been conducted for several years at the Y. M. C. A. by the Federated Churches of Franklin County. Few of the teachers of the Hilltop could attend it, however, because of the time required for the trip down town. The same type of school will now be brought to our own community and conducted with the same high standard of instruction. Scores of teachers should be able to grasp this opportunity for preparation for religious teaching.

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Cromer, 499 Harris Ave., entertained Mr. and Mrs. John Heckle and son at dinner Christmas.

Mr. John Umbaugh of Mt. Vernon was the guest over Christmas of his daughters, Miss Helen Umbaugh and Mrs. Katherine Baxter, 44 S. Ogden Ave.

Meeting of persons interested in the functioning of the Y. M. C. A. as a community institution, a musical program by Floyd Hubbs, and the serving of punch in the library lounge adjoining the main lobby will be features of the aftrenoon on the first floor. The Y. Wives club will assist in serving refreshments.

Parties of visitors who wish to see the different departmenas in action will be conducted through the entire building by members of the committee headed by J. F. Machotka. Department heads will all be at work in their offices.

Besides the regular cafeteria service, there is to be a special New Year's dinner for which reservations must be made in advance. It will be served from 5 until 7 p. m.

Physical exhibitions planned include the conclusion of the 150-mile swim being made by William Holtsinger. He will swim the final 10 miles of his stretch, establish a record for the local pool, and receive a silver loving cup as his trophy. CHRISTMAS TREE AT VALLEYVIEW

Kiddies Treated With Picture Show and Candy in New Community Hall.

The new Valleyview subdivision community hall was opened for the first time on last Friday afternoon at 1 o'clock when the children of the community were entertained by a picture show and Christmas program.

About 200 were present for the afternoon entertainment. The projecting machine was loaned for the occasion by the American Theatre Equipment Co. The picture was secured by Fred H. Hartwich, president of the Motion Picture Operators association of the city.

A Christmas tree with presents for all the children was a big feature of the afternoon. Candy was distributed to all. It was a big treat to the children.

The Rodgers Realty Co., developers of the subdivision, are highly pleased with the new hall and the community spirit being shown in the new subdivision.

The new hall is a frame structure having a seating capacity of about three hundred people. The building is well heated and ventilated.

The annual Christmas party of the employes of Reiller's dry good store will be held Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. Stuart Hurd, 351 Binns Blvd.

GIRL RESERVES HAVE SERVICES

Mothers Are Guests at West High Girl Reserve Program at School.

Recognition services were held by the Junior Girl Reserves of West High school at their last meeting. Sixteen new members took part in the ceremonies. The services were led by the officers of the club.

Miss Cramer, Y. W. C. A. representative of the central office in the city, told the story of the Blue Triangle. Miss Kern gave several readings.

A Christmas play portraying the spirit of Christmas in the seventh century was given. A grab bag was also of much interest to all.

The following mothers were guests of the meeting: Mrs. McNabb, Mrs. Bowers, Mrs. Sinclair, Mrs. Marshall, Mrs. Noles, Mrs. Livingstone, Mrs. Berman and Mrs. Hall.

Christmas day was one of much enjoyment and pleasure for Mrs. Martha E. Long, 65 N. Park Ave., one of the oldest residents of the Hilltop. HAGUE AVENUE CAR SERVICE DISCONTINUED

Rail-Light Hands Hilltop Residents a Lemon in Connection With W. Broad Bus Service

Hilltop residents were surprised Sunday morning to learn that the Columbus Railway, Power & Light had presented them with a Christmas present in the form of a new bus service on W. Broad St. from Hague Ave. to the Big Four tracks. The service over this route is every 20 minutes and is covered by one bus.

Incidentally the same Santa Claus had something else for residents of the Hilltop and handed them a lemon when street car service on Hague Ave., between Sullivant Ave. and Broad St., was discontinued when the bus service was installed. This action on the part of the Rail-Light Co. eliminates all street car service between Sullivant and Broad Street, which has been in effect for almost 25 years.

Resentment against the methods of the Rail-Light Co. in eliminating this service was at a high pitch Tuesday in the Hilltop section most affected by this new joker of Slater's.

A grievance committee of the Hilltop Improvement Association, composed of Ray G. Haunts, 44 Binns Blvd., and O. C. Voss, 90 S. Harris Ave., attempted to lodge a complaint with Slater Tuesday, but all they got was one of his customary refusals to talk to any of his customers. His refusal this time was sweetened by the message that he was too busy to see them.

This refusal to grant an audience, Mr. Haunts said, came after Slater's secretary had taken Hauntss card in to Slater and had returned with a query as to whether the call was "personal or business."

The information was given by Haunts that it was business, and when he revealed to the girl the purpose of his call the "too busy" answer was the result, Haunts said.

In conference with City Attorney Leach, Mr. Haunts was informed that the franchise of the Ohio Electric Co. had seven years yet to run, but that the franchise also provided for a 15-minute service on Hague Ave., which the Ohio Electric will be compelled to provide. The Rail-Light provided this service over the Ohio Electric tracks.

Mr. Hauntz, as leader of the movement in protesting against the discontinuance of this service, will receive complaints from any who are interested in endeavoring to get this car service restored.

A NEW YEAR

The new year is a time set aside by some for the making and breaking of New Year's resolutions and for others it is a time for keeping the resolutions made. Probably the latter is the hardest to find but the most valued when found.

But regardless of the superstitions cabbage eating on New Year's day and the broken resolutions there is much to be looked forward to in the coming year. The man who is forever putting things off until a later day will find the time close at hand for a new beginning. And once the start is made the better results may be maintained by co-operation throughout the year.

This co-operation may be in a business way. It may be in the fact that you can aid a neighbor when called upon. Or it may mean only a smile throughout the year. There will be much to be gained by this last. The fellow that is continually complaining of the hardships he is undergoing never rises to the top. While on the other hand the fellow that enjoys life and shows others the pleasure he gets from serving them in some manner is the one that is foremost in his community.

Here's to you and yours for all the joys of the new year and may it be filled with smiles. Everybody happy!

Every ham actor is blessed with a large bump of conceit which is one more example of the law of compensation.

Both Day and Evening Modes Accent the Prestige of Velvet

Enthusiasm for velvet knows no bounds. Comes also the message from fashion's headquarters that the advance spring styles will continue to emphasize the chic of velvet. Now that velvet has taken on the sheerness and suppleness of chiffon and georgette, it is to be expected that the mode recognize its eligibility as an all-the-year-round fabric—which it has. Furthermore velvet has so endeared itself to the feminine heart because of its new subtleties of weave, design and coloring, one cannot imagine a style program which does not feature this beloved of materials.

One wears velvet as modishly in the daytime as during the formal evening hours. It all depends on the styling of the gown or costume—a point well brought out in the costumes here pictured. The youthful frock in the foreground which so ostensibly defines a daytime mode emphasizes several intriguing style details. There is the cunning eton jacket, for instance, which is considered such excellent style. It is posed over a blouse of rich cloth which has the glint of metal in its weave. The idea of the metallic touch is carried out in silver buttons and embroidery on the jacket. The fanciful belt sports a sparkling buckle which is inset with colorful stones.

Jeweled buckles and narrow metal belts are right in the topmost mode this season.

For evening, black velvet enriched with rhinestone embroidery is a favorite theme. Unusual designs give individuality to each gown. For instance the evening mode shown to the left in the illustration is distinguished with a patterning which accomplishes a handsome girdle effect. Also a massive necklace design is suggested, which all goes to show the artistry displayed in the glittering decorative handcraft which so handsomely individualizes the formal velvet dress.

Those going South are ordering charming chiffon gowns with sheer velvet wraps to match the latter, lined with the fabric of the frock. This foreword gives hint of the coming popularity of pastel tinted velvets.

In the realm of accessories, velvet is being highlighted by the mode for handbags, also for dressy pumps with handsome steel or jeweled buckles—which all attests to the importance of velvet in the mode.

SMILE WITH US

Don't be afraid of bein' too obvious in your compliments. The man ain't livin' that can see through the line about lookin' swell in his dinner coat.

A man that knew how to buy a woman flowers could get away with anything short of halitosis.

Patient.—Doctor, how can I ever repay you for your kindness to me?

Doctor.—By check, money order, or cash.

We.—Who is that fellow with the long hair?

She.—He's a fellow from Yale.

We.—Oh, I've often heard of those Yale locks.

Knowin' the disease is half the cure. But how many of us ever suspecks there's any thing the matter with us?

Reputation is a great lieutenant. It'll keep people outa the lion's den even when he ain't there no more.

"I like cheerfulness. I admire any one who sings at his work."

"How you must like a mosquito!"

"Times sure have changed, haven't they?"

"I'll say. Why I can remember when a rusty nail was considered the most dangerous thing to step on."

Lady (to grocer).—I want to buy some lard.

Grocer.—Pail.

Lady.—I didn't know it came in two shades.

His Aunt.—The best thing you can do, John, is to go and apologize to Molly.

John.—Yes, but I say, aunt, I was in the right.

His Aunt.—Well in that case you had better take some flowers, too.

The host was nervous and inexperienced, and he rose hurriedly at the conclusion of a song which one of the guests had contributed.

"Ladies and gentlemen, he began. "Before Mrs. Smith started to sing she—ah—told me her ah—voice was not in the best condition and—ah—asked me to apologize for it, but I neglected to do so and—ah—I apologize now."

A fool and her kisses is soon parted.

Women are funy gamblers. They hate to risk a dollar on poker, but they stake everything they got on bein' able to hold some man's love and in no other game in the world is the cards so stacked against 'em.

There's an old saying that curiosity killed the cat but we know it has done more than that—it sold several thousand new Ford cars when they finally came before the public.

A New York man slashed his throat last week because there wasn't any more liquor in the house. This is the height of laziness when there seems to so much on the outside—especially in New York.

A well-known British scientist says that the flapper is a saint to the chemical industry—she has chemicals in her few clothes, paints and podwers and perfumes are always present, and the materials of her clothes are flashing arrays of dye stuffs. And we might add that for the most part they usually have a little synthetic sweetness about them.

Chicago has something new in the way of burglars. He is the kind that upon leaving the house kisses the women of the household. This romantic business will cause burglars to be more careful of the houses they enter if a kiss is to be transplanted each time.

The holiday season may be said to extend from Christmas to New Years. But many take it the wrong way and make it last from New Years till Christmas. A possible reason for some long vacations like this is the fact that the effects of the last New Year's celebration have not worn off yet.

Lindy and Hearst are two distinct types of men who get their names in the papers in connection with Mexico. Lindy is our good will ambassador and Hearst is the disturbance in the dust pile. Lindberg is the flying eagle and Hearst is being dubbed the jay bird.

Until now the slogan has been "Do your Christmas shopping early." The New Year will probably start with the same slogan.

• • • •

Not only were Christmas shoppers in the list of last "minute men" but we must also include the license buyer who leaves the 1927 tags on till the last minute.

• • • •

All the last year's resolutions were broken in good order and the possibilities of a good crop of broken resolutions are present again before the New Year presents itself.

As winter was officially ushered in last Tuesday the temperature changed and was more like spring than winter. Now we know why it is called Dame winter—she has the privilege of changing her mind.

Lindberg has more medals than some people have money. Who knows how soon this may become a saying of the forever present class of figurative language users.

How It Started
By JEAN NEWTON

YOUR FAMILY DOCTOR

"From the sublime to the ridiculous" describes no greater transition than is found in some of our modern survivals, compared with their origins.

The doctor, for instance—where among the professions is there a calling more honored or more dignified? Yet it had its beginning in a state of slavery, the early doctor, or leech, as he was called, when all ills were cured by blood letting—having been a serf or bound attendant in the households of great families. Hence the expression "family doctor."

Also the squeamishness, "ethics," or, as some people think, false pride of doctors in not liking to mention or discuss their fees as those rendering other service will name their price! This is said to be dying out in this country, at least, but it is quite familiar to all as heritage of the profession. In England, for instance, no member of the Royal College of Physicians is permitted to sue a patient for the collection of a bill! This is considered a mark of dignity and superiority. Yet, as a matter of fact, it is a survival of the doctor's original humble status. For in early days he was not permitted to charge money for his services—only to accept with thanks such gifts of clothing and other necessities that were sent him by grateful and generous patients!

Larvae Feed on Plants

The caterpillars or larvae of tiger moths are very general feeders, preferring herbaceous plants. Some species are destructive to the foliage of trees, says Nature Magazine. After becoming full fed, some species spend the winter in cocoons woven of silk, mixed with hairs which are shed during the process of pupation.

The Man With Three Names

By Harold MacGrath

(©, by Bell Syndicate.)
WNU Service

"That makes our understanding perfect. Her beauty is the least of her. Do you remember you said that? You saw in a glance what it took me three years to find out. You and I are going to make Bannister a perfect city. But I must do my share in my own fashion. I simply can't have her know; at least until I have made sustantial progress. You shall have your paper back, of course. I am growing tired. Just a little more. You could have come to me and demanded I fulfill my end of that mad bargain. You were honest, and you declined. Your whimsicality is on the surface; underneath you are unchangeable. So it occurrs to me that if you gave up Betty it was not that you had ceased to care. Am I right?"

"Yes."

"As a man cares but once?"

"But once."

"Then—go and find her."

"You mean that?"

"Why not? You are the son of Digby Hallowell, but she is the daughter of Dunleigh Mansfield. Between these two fathers where's the choice? I merely stayed within the law and your father played the game outside. I threw away all the glorious hours that are before you. I sent Betty to France because I didn't care to be bothered with her. Find her, and when you find her tell her I sent you. And then—both of you—come back here!"

Cathewe's taxi went up Polygon hill after the manner of the tank, slowly, ponderously and heartrendingly. Street cars got in the way, other taxis, lumber and coal wagons and pedestrians. Eventually he reached the Mansfield place.

The butler, upon opening the door, eyed him with repellent loyalty.

"Miss Mansfield is not at home, sir;" and suggestively started the door toward the latch.

"Just a moment. I am sent by Mr Mansfield himself. He wishes me to find his daughter."

"I do not know where she went, sir. It is probable that she is with Miss Maddox."

"May I use the telephone?"

Reluctantly the butler ushered the enemy into the study and indicated the telephone.

The Maddox maid replied to the first call. No; Miss Mansfield had gone across to the Cathewes'. The second call was not answered, though he kept central busy for two or three minutes. Vaguely alarmed, he returned to the taxi. In the end he found himself in his own hallway, breathless with the chase.

Music. She had come to hear his mother play. This accounted for the unanswered telephone call.

CHAPTER XII
Love's Victory.

He opened the door of the living-room and stood on the threshold. Never before had he heard his mother play the "Fourth Ballade" with such fire and passio

And the girl there, seated on the floor, her exquisite profile, against the dark wine of the rosewood, as beautifully defined as a cameo! Her eyes were closed dreamy ecstasy.

Here, after what had taken place last night! There could be only one meaning: that she knew everything. Maddox! She had sent for the doctor and in some manner had forced the truth from him. On top of this came the recollection of the cub reporter's confession of having sent Betty a complete series of clippings. She had confronted Maddox with them, and the old fellow had told her the truth. And somehow he must prevail upon her never to let her father know. Here!—because she knew also that he was the author of those letters! Hadn't she come from Nancy's? Out of that abysmal gloom of two hours gone, his miraculous sunshine!

The performer dropped her hands. The piano was still singing as she turned her head.

"Bonny!"

Betty opened her eyes, and slowly rose to her feet, numb with an inexplicable terror, not unlike that which childhood finds in dark rooms. What had happened? This: It was the first time she had ever seen the man who had written those wonderful letters—the exquisite poems to the idyl of this hour. She had come boldly into his house in the pursuit of happiness. She saw now the imodesty of the act. The knowledge sent all the blood into her heart, then flung it into her cheeks—burgundy in an alabaster cup. Always he would thing that she had sought him. The shame of it!

She stood with her back to the piano, staring. Tableau. Then she reached backward, toward the bench, toward the arms she wanted, needed. She was afraid. She turned desperately—to find that she had been betrayed. The bench was vacant. Mrs. Cathewe had stolen quietly from the room.

"I—. She has gone!" Betty stammered.

He crossed the room quickly, but he did not touch her. "There is no doubt in your mind?"

"Doubt of what"—beginning to recover her poise.

"Of me? That I love you, that I loved you the first time I saw you?"

"Which of you three is talking?"

"Which of— What do you mean?" bewildered.

"Is it Brandon Cathewe, George Cottar, or Brandon Hallowell?"

"All three of us. We all love you! Can you care, just a little?"

"But you gave me up!"

"Only physically. For weeks I've been torn by wild horses."

"I'm glad of that!"—now sure of herself, of him, of all the world.

"Glad that I was unhappy?"

"Wasn't I unhappy, too? Didn't you jilt me?"

"Do you care?"

"Well—perhaps." A pause. "I'm beginning to wonder if you really wrote those letters."

"Why?"

"Well, the writer of those beautiful love letters wouldn't stand as you do. Just asking questions."

"What would be do?" falling into her mood.

"He would sweep her into his arms, kiss me, put me on his horse and ride away—and ask questions—"

"Afterward!"

When she pressed back from him she was breathless. "And now I'm suspicious."

"Suspicious?"

"You did that—overly well!"

"The wonder of you!"

She crept back into his arms, all her mischief gone. "Love me always like that— And don't be afraid of daddy."

"I'm not," he replied. "Your father has made all this possible. He sent me to you."

"He did? I love him! And he shall never know that I know. To want to do fine and noble things because he has learned to love me!" Another pause. "Is there anything now on Jupiter you want?"

There was only one way to answer that.

THE END.

"Trade Your Smiles."

Love must be a wonderful thing when it reaches the stage where the fellow plants a bomb in a stove to show his sweetie how much he thinks of her. This happened in Illinois last week and it wasn't in Chicago either.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

TELLING IS SELLING

In these days of time-saving devices, money-saving inventions and effort-saving ideas the thinking man finds much to interts him when he hears another thinking man compress a big thought into the fewest possible words.

The literary man has a name for these examples of condensed wisdom He calls them "epigrams."

"Epigram" is an interesting word. You can spend a useful fifteen minutes studying out in some good dictionary just what it meant in the original Greek and how it came to have an entirely different meaning in English.

One of the most condensed and meaningful phrases I have ever seen written or heard spoken was used by a great editorial writer who boiled down a whole sermon into three words when he said "Repetition is reputation." That is sound, unassailable truth in the fewest possible words.

Alongside that condensation of wisdom I have filed away in my memory the three-word statement that I heard an advertising solicitor use the other day in convincing a prospective buyer of publicity that advertising would be the best possible investment that he could make.

These were the three words he used: "Telling is selling."

That comes pretty near reducing the statement of what advertising is to the fewest possible words and stating it in the simplest possible way.

To a greater or lesser degree every human being is an advertiser.

The man or woman who dresses well advertises prosperity.

The man or woman who uses the proper words in proper places and shows a broad acquaintance with facts advertises education.

The man with the light step, quick movement, unceasing activity, advertises energy, probably ambition.

You say "I am a good judge of human nature." That is only another way of stating that you are an accurate reader of the personal advertising of individuals.

Every day we unconsciously "tell" ourselves—advertise ourselves—by our actions, by our habits, by our conversation. Every day we unknowingly succeed in or fail in "selling" ourselves.

If "telling is selling" it is equally true that "Overtelling is underselling."

Nobody ever permanently gained anything by wandering from the truth. Boasting is only a polite name for lying.

Any buyer of men or merchandise would rather be surprised by finding his purchase better than he thought it was than to discover that it failed to come up to what he had reasonable right to expect.

If you have occasion to talk about yourself tell just what you are.

If you find it necessary to sell yourself do not bargain for more than you can deliver.

"Telling is selling," but the telling must be the truth and selling must be on the basis of turning over just what you have agreed to—of having the goods test 100 per cent of what they were represented to be.

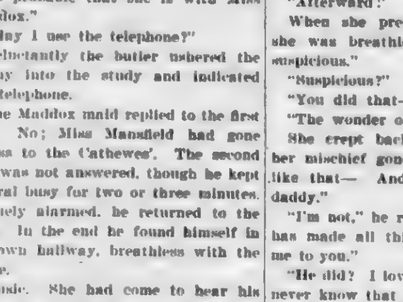
THE CAMEL KNEELS

The camel at the close of day
Kneels down upon the sandy plain.
To have his burden lifted off,
To rest again.



My soul, thou shouldst upon thy knees,
When daylight draweth to a close,
And let the Master lift thy load
And grant repose.

Else how canst thou tomorrow meet,
With all tomorrow's work to do,
If thou thy burden all the night
Dost carry through?

The camel kneels at break of day,
To have his guide replace his load,
Then rises up anew to take
The desert road.

So thou shouldst kneel at morning's dawn,
That God may give thee daily care,
Assured that He no load too great,
Will make thee bear.

"TRADE YOUR SMILES"

SMILE IN 1928

THERE is but one way to start the new year right. To have the good will of everyone and have a permanent happiness one must remember to smile. So now is the time to start 1928 off with a hearty smile and keep it present throughout the year.

Smiling isn't half hard when once it is tried. The trouble with some people is that they think they are wasting too much time and energy in smiling. The truth of the matter is that the person who doesn't smile loses all around the board. He is jilted by his friends and even his business, whatever it may be, falls down.

Let's Trade our Smiles with others in 1928

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS
By H. IRVING KING

BREAKING THE NEEDLE

The superstition with regard to breaking a needle while sewing upon a new garment differs in different sections of the country; but has in all a general significance of good luck. In some places they say that to break a needle while sewing upon a new dress is a sign that the owner will live to wear out the garment. In other places they believe that it is a sign that the person for whom the garment is being made will, if single, be married before the year is out; while in some sections the breaking of the needle means that the garment will be "lucky" for its owner.

The magic of this superstition is based upon the idea so firmly held by the ancients that iron was obnoxious to evil spirits—they hated it and they feared it and sought to work mischief upon anything into the composition of which iron entered and to revenge themselves upon those who worked in iron.

The needle is an iron implement—or, which is the same thing, a steel one—and the evil spirits hover about in anger when it is being used, but are afraid to touch it. They might, however, try to "hoodoo" the garment which was being constructed by the feared and hated implement. But when you break the needle, thereby destroying it, you do just what the spirits would have done had they dared and they go off satisfied, leaving the garment being worked upon therefore "lucky"; their vengeance is accomplished by the destruction of the needle.

MEMORY'S CHILDREN
By Douglas Malloch

When they grow up, the girls, the boys,
And leave us just remembered joys,
No more a voice upon the stair
But only an old echo there,
When they grow up, and far they roam,
Or build another house and home,
Heart-hungry, often we complain;
For all our toil where is our gain?

Well, much we gained. Though only these
We have, we have the memories;
And what makes lovely, lovely age
Is written on some other page,
Some earlier record. Youth must look
Ahead for you. But age's book
Is filled with pictures of the past
That gives us pleasure to the last.

Though children gave us nothing more,
They left within our hearts a store
Of childish prattle, many a kiss
That now perhaps we badly miss
Yet still we have. However far
This very night our children are,
I'm sure that many treasures stay
That time can never take away.

That is our gain. When they grow up
They leave some joy within the cup
The man may bie him over hills
The woman wander where she wills,
But from the cradle of our hearts
No baby ever quite departs.
We have the buds who lose the flow'rs:
Our children still are always ours.

Ordinary beef liver is being used in the treatment of pernicious anemia, a disease which is nearly always fatal (not to be confused with anemia due to common causes). According to scientists at Harvard University, a diet rich in liver causes an increase in the number of red blood corpuscles in patients with the disease. "They are now endeavoring to isolate the active principle in liver. Lack of this principle apparently prevents patients with pernicious anemia from manufacturing red blood cells." Successful treatment of patients by means of a diet rich in liver has been reported by Dr. George R. Minot and Dr. William P. Murphy, of the Collis P. Huntington Memorial Hospital of Harvard University and the Peter Bent Brigham Hospital. An advance in the treatment was made when liver extract was substituted for liver, a daily diet of which "in the quantities necessary to replenish the blood with red corpuscles is difficult to take for a long time."

More than four million new poles for telegraph, telephone, and other electric and power companies are needed every year in the United States. These have to be cut from the country's forests, and the problem of decreasing timber supplies and increasing demand for poles is beginning to be serious. In one night's sleet storm, in February, 1927, 783 poles were lost near Baltimore. The tips of Douglas firs which grows as high as a sixteen-story office building furnish many telephone poles. Other trees used are northern white cedar from the lake states; yellow pine from the South; red cedar, lodgepole pine, and Engleman spruce from the Northwest; and northern white cedar which is used where there is little danger from ice storms. When a tree is to be cut trimming off all the branches and topping the trunk, so that when the tree falls it will not break others with its sweeping limbs.

The Sandman Story
Martha Martin

THE STORY OF THE TREES

"At this time of the year," said the Sandman, "the birds are eating the seeds of the red cedar trees. These trees are strange in their behavior. They will grow well in a new neighborhood, but they do not like to have many trees about them, and if other trees grow up about them they become discouraged and give up trying to grow!

"So they are to be found, and the birds find them. But they're certainly fond of open spaces.

"The birds are also finding winter food in barks of trees where little eggs

"Thank You, Thank You, Mr. Moon," Said the Pine Tree.

of insects are hidden, and there are insects upon the fallen leaves.

"The ducks find insects on the water until the ice freezes over the water weeds in the deep parts of the streams.

"And now the winter trees are looking their best, for they know that they must look well in the winter time, too.

"The pines and hardwood trees tell their own stories.

"Many people can read them just as they would read the chapters of a book. There is a ring of wood around the stump for every year that the tree has lived, and from the width between these rings it can be told how much the tree grew when it was two years old or three years old, and whether it had a good year or a bad year.

"The trees tell their stories just as so many of the different creatures do, and all we need is to study their language so we can learn their stories, for they as so very, very wonderful and marvelous!

"The roots of plants and trees, too, have stories to tell of the work that they do.

"They never come above the ground, but they do their parts not caring whether they are seen. In fact, they like to hide their good works.

"They go their own ways, getting free from anything that would hurt them, and with their little root hairs curling themselves about the soil and growing and getting their root food.

"They know that there is air, too, in the soil and dampness, and in some wonderful way they do the work that Mother Nature has set for them to do without any fuss and as though it were no bother.

"But the more we see of it the more amazing it seems, and the more we want to marvel.

"Some of Mother Nature's children do not do as she tells them. There is the Mexican Bean Beetle about whom there has been a great deal of trouble, for she destroys crops and everything that is given to make the crops better she takes for herself.

"She is a relative of Lady Bug, but Lady Bug is not harmful and doesn't like to think that this relative of hers is so dreadful.

"But I must tell you more about the Pine tree and what he said to Moon as Mr. Moon looked down at him.

"'Mr. Moon, you have seen me here for a great many years. You perhaps do not keep count of the years. You do not have to, for it doesn't matter what age the moon is, as the moon always looks about the same age!

"'Of course, you wear different suits, and when you're no longer a full moon, perhaps you're called an older moon, but you come back again as a young new moon, so I suppose that is why you do not consider the years.

"'Therefore it doesn't matter how many years you have seen me.'

"'It matters,' said Mr. Moon, 'for I am always glad to see you. I want to see you for many more years. That is why it matters. I like to count those splendid years.'"

"'Thank you, thank you, Mr. Moon,' said the Pine tree. 'But this is what I have to tell you. I love to be a winter tree, for in the winter time it seems that every one is fonder of me for being ever, ever green.'

"'And I like to be liked.'

"'Every one does,' said Mr. Moon. 'I've been shining for a good many years, and I know that.'"

SURPLUS OF CAPITALS

States of the Union that had two capitals at the same time are Rhode Island and Connecticut. In Rhode Island it was a case of the state having two large towns, each claiming to be the political center, and neither agreeing to surrender its prestige. Thus both Newport and Providence claimed the honor of being the capital of the state. Connecticut was similarly placed with regard to Hartford and New Haven. The towns were originally the capitals of separate colonies. Eventually, however, the geographical advantages of Hartford were admitted by New Haven and became the sole capital in 1873.

In announcing population estimates for all cities over 30,000 inhabitants in 1920, the Census Bureau based its estimates on the assumption that the annual increase in population since 1920 has been the same since the average annual increase between 1910 and 1920. Allowances have been made, however, of annexations or detachments of territory made by cities of which the Bureau is advised. In some instances where the Bureau believes cities enjoyed exceptional and unusual growth between 1910 and 1920 no estimates were made.

The Bureau announces that it will make no estimates of population of counties until the actual census is taken in 1930.

IRELAND'S BIG WIND

The "big wind' in Ireland in 1839 began before sunset one day and raged for 12 hours. When it finally subsided but precious little was left that could be blown over. It was not a tornado but a full gale. Some 200 houses were blown down and as many more burned as the result of fires started by the wind. Twenty persons were killed and over 100 drowned. The coast of Ireland and the western coast of England were strewn with wrecks. It is said that for hours no one could stand erect in an open field because of the force of the wind. To the Irish who survived it, the "big wind" was comparable to the great September gale, which our ancestors experienced, and to the blizzard of 1888.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Committees who are pushing the program under the leadership of the dean, Rev. A. C. Baughman, are an administration committee with Mr. A. E. Garrison as chairman, a promotion committee with Dr. R. J. Miller as chairman and a finance committee with Rev. J. H. Hughes as chairman.

The teaching force includes Rev. Carey M. Young, of Columbus, expert in young people's work; Mrs. R. M. Sandy, of Mt. PLAN FULL DAY FOR ALL PUPILS

Part-Time Scholars Will Be Able to Attend School All Day.

Columbus schools opened Tuesday after a two weeks' Christmas vacation.

Some time this month more than 600 Columbus school children, to...ed by lack of space to attend school on a part-time schedule, will be able to attend on a full-time basis, Superintendent Collicott said Tuesday. To this end rooms have been rented in the John Burroughs and Eleventh Ave. districts, where 250 pupils in each school have been deprived of a full school day.

This overcrowded condition has prevailed to some extent for 25 years. Recently additional space was obtained for the Linden school by renting the Linden Church of Christ.

FIRES FOLLOW COLD WAVE

Thawing of Frozen Pipes and Overheated Furnaces Cause Fire Menace.

Along with the extremely cold weather that has been present during the past week city firemen have been busy with calls from all over town. Overheated furnaces and thawing of water pipes has been the cause of most of the smaller damages.

On Sunday a fire resulting in a $250 loss occurred at the home of Steve Dundarant, 354 S. Oakley Ave. Lighted paper used to thaw frozen pipes was the cause of the fire.

While attempting to thaw out water pipes with a gasoline torch the home of A. B. Merriman, 381 S. Hague Ave., caught fire and resulted in a damage of $25.

An overheated furnace caused a slight blaze at the home of John Wagner, 156 Richardson Ave.

Mrs. Minnie Huffman, 57, of 246 S. Park Ave., suffered a fractured knee cap when she walked into the side of an auto driven by J. B. Glick, 630 S. Ogden Ave., last Friday.

The W. H. O. club met Tuesday evening at the home of Elizabeth Vanharken, 231 N. BANK CLEARINGS SHOW BIG GAIN

Columbus bank clearings for 1927 totaled $922,793,300, against $881,312,600 for 1926, a gain of $41,480,700 and a new high record for all time.

The gain is remarkable in the face of considerable adverse talk about business during the year. The clearings in December were $82,076,300, against $78,164,700 for the same month a year ago. If bank clearings are any guide to business conditions, the past year has been a prosperous one for Columbus.

The Elite Embroidtry club members and their husbands were most delightfully entertained by Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Spangler of Andover Road. The party was held New Year's eve and was in the form of a watch party. At a very late hour the hostess served a most delicious luncheon.

BUSINESS MEN WORK FOR CARS

Suspended Service on Hague Avenue Much Inconvenience to Hilltop People.

No definite action was taken by the Hilltop Business Men's Association at its meeting Tuesday night in regard to the suspended street car service on Hague avenue, other than a thorough discussion and appointment of a committee to investigate the situation and urge council to take action.

It was pointed out that the suspension of this service is a great injury to Hilltop people. One lady reports that 27 children near Sullivant and Hague avenues, attending Highland Avenue school, are at a great disadvantage in getting to classes on time. Especially is this a great hardship during the intense cold weather.

Another feature is the loss of business to the Hilltop merchants which is a very noticeable amount.

Fred L. Sulsberger was appointed chairman of the councilmanic committee, whose duties it will be to look after all matters of interest to Hilltop people coming before that body.

Another committee was appointed to bring immediate action in regard to a new postoffice for the Hilltop.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Virginia Beaver, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Beaver, 3420 E. Main St., to Mr. Robert Fulton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy P. Fulton, 178 S. Eureka Ave. The wedding is planned for June.

The Old Doctor's Wife

Up in the old doctor's library, kept with loving care just as he left it when he went on the long journey ten years before, crouched an old woman, with gentle but haggard face. More than one friend of the old doctor's wife had begged her to spend the day with them, thinking to save her some of the anguish of the sale. But the old woman was positive in her refusal. She must stay at home, she said, to see that no harm came to any of the treasures and to bid them good-by and to know into whose care they were going.

"Going—going!" called the auctioneer. "Why gentlemen, it's ridiculous! That desk is worth $40, if it's worth a cent. Offer something in reason."

"Five dollars," said a voice in the doorway.

"Five dollars and ten cents," rasped a harsh voice quickly.

The old woman shivered. She had heard that rasping voice many times during the day, from one room to another, and now it had come to the doctor's loved library, where she was crouching. Giles Cady in his very young days had entered her husband's employ as office boy, then had studied medicine with him and finally been taken into partnership. In those days Doctor Brooks had been considered very well-to-do, and Giles Cady had nothing. Giles Cady was now well-to-do, and it was he who was closing out the doctor's wife under a mortgage for some money the doctor had borrowed.

"Going—going," repeated the auctioneer; "going—"

"Six dollars," from the doorway.

"Six-ten," rasped Giles.

A quick step came up the stairs and along the hall into the library and its owner glanced around. Then he walked straight to the old doctor's wife.

"I reached town only an hour ago, Mrs. Brooks," he said in a low voice, "and just heard. I came straight here. I'm sorry. Isn't there something I can do?"

"Not a thing, Harry," smiled the old woman, the tenderness returning to her eyes. "Just your coming has made me feel better. The doctor loved his young people, as he called them, and you were one of his favorites."

"He saved my life when I had that fever," said the young man in a troubled voice. "He sat up with me at least half a dozen nights in succession, I wish I could—"

"Going—going—going," singsonged the auctioneer. "Why gentlemen!"

"Six-fifty," from the doorway.

"Six-sixty," snapped Giles.

"Twenty-five dollars," called the young man sharply.

All in the room turned quickly. The auctioneer smiled. Giles glared.

"Twenty-five-ten," he yelled.

"Thirty."

Giles stamped across the room.

"What do you mean, sir—what do you mean?" he spluttered.

"Why, that I may get the desk, of course. What did you mean by bidding against the others? You wanted the desk, too, of course. It's really a very valuable article. I believe the doctor was your benefactor, though, so naturally you want it."

Giles half opened his mouth, as though to make some angry retort. But the room was watching and he forced a sickly smile to his face and turned away.

"Thirty ten," he muttered.

"Thirty-five."

"Thirty-five-ten."

The young man looked at his companion with an amused smile, in which was wonder at the temper of his competitor's bidding. Giles reputation did not lean that way.

"Forty.

"Forty-ten."

"Forty-five."

"Forty-five-ten."

The room's amusement had changed to amazement. What did it mean? There evidently was something behind it all, for Giles was not a man to throw away even a cent.

"Fifty."

"Please, Harry," whispered Mrs. Brooks. "You've gouged him far enough. The desk is invaluable to me, but couldn't be to Giles. I don't understand."

Harry nodded, and when the savage "Fifty-ten," came, remained silent.

At the "Gone to Giles Cady," the new owner sprang forward and began to open drawer after drawer in his evident anxiety, seemingly forgetful of the onlookers. The old doctor's wife watched him curiously.

"Nothing there, Giles," she called, "except in the third drawer from the right, which has several of the doctor's letters. I meant to have taken them out, but neglected it. You may hand them to me now, as they are of no use to you."

"I bought the desk, which means everything about it," Giles retorted ungraciously.

He pulled out the third drawer and took from it several letters, which he examined carefully, opening and shaking them out and looking into the envelopes. Then he tossed them contemptuously to the old woman.

"Take 'em if you want 'em," he rasped. "They're no good."

He was beginning to recover his composure now that the desk seemed to be empty. And, besides, he was becoming conscious of the curious and even suspicious glances of those around. He laughed constrainedly.

"Just looking to see if the drawers pull in and out easy," he muttered.

"I'm sorry you can't find what you are looking for, Giles," spoke up the woman quietly. "I remember now that you came here right after my husband's death and insisted on searching the desk for some papers that belonged to you. I refused, because I haven't trusted you for a good many years, Giles. But I looked the desk through and there was nothing in it belonging to you. Several times since then you have tried to get into the room and once when you thought I was away. But, unfortunately, I happened to be sleeping in this very chair and awakened in time to frighten you off."

"I thought some of my papers were here and as you wouldn't give 'em up I meant to get 'em," rasped Giles doggedly. "The doctor must have burnt 'em when he destroyed a lot of his bills before he died. He always was a shiftless old fool that way."

"Stop!"

Giles quailed under the scorn of her voice.

"I don't want you to allude to my husband in any way, Giles," she went on. He made you—or, I mean, he tried to, and failed—and in some way I do not understand, all the misfortunes have come through you, directly or indirectly. After the sale is over I suppose this house will belong to you and the instant it is legally so I shall go out and I hope we shall not see each other again."

"With all my heart," grinned Giles maliciously, "and I wish I had my money back so you could take this old box along."

The young man had been watching him keenly, with a curious light coming to his eyes.

"You don't want the desk?" he asked, with an appearance of carelessness.

"No, I don't," shortly. "I'd give a whole dollar to back out. I was just excited."

"All right," said the young man, looking toward the auctioneer. "I'll go the fifty and ten and take the desk. Now I want you to hold the auction a few minutes. I may be mistaken, but I believe there is something behind this. I have a friend who has a desk exactly like this, and he showed me a number of secret drawers about it. I have an idea this desk has the same secret receptacles."

He stepped toward the desk and at the same moment Giles Cady sprang forward.

"Don't you touch that desk," he threatened. "It's mine, and—"

"Hold this fellow back, some of you, for a few minutes," the young man requested.

The auctioneer stepped in front of Giles. "Better stand quiet a little while," he advised. "I'm working for you, I know, but you've been acting sort of funny, and folks won't stand too much, 'specially as everybody likes the old doctor's wife. Now you can go ahead," to the young man.

The young man slipped a hand in under one of the larger drawers and touched a spring somewhere, and instantly from what seemed solid wood a little drawer shot out. Giles saw it and his beady eyes began to blink with something that might have been apprehension.

In the drawer were several letters. The young man glanced at the outside of the envelope and his eyes grew tender. He carried them to the old woman.

"They are yours," he said in a low voice, "written to the doctor before your marriage, I think."

He went back to the desk and again slipped his hand in behind somewhere, and another tiny drawer slid out filled with papers. The young man glanced over them rapidly and passed one to the auctioneer. Giles made a grab for it, but was pushed back by one of the strong hands of the auctioneer, while the other held up the paper. As he read it the auctioneer's lips pursed themselves into a whistle, and he strode to one of the windows, which was open. People below were carrying out some of the things they had purchased.

"Hi there!" yelled the auctioneer, loudly. "Put everything back in its place. The whole auction's off." Then he went back into the room.

"W—what's the matter?" blustered the rasping voice of Giles, trembling in spite of his efforts at bravado. "What right have you to call my auction off?"

The auctioneer only grunted contemptuously.

"Just this right, Giles," said the young man sternly. "That paper I gave the auctioneer is your receipt and cancellation of the mortgage in full, so this house and all its contents belong to Mrs. Brooks. Besides all this, I have several papers here, receipts and other things which involve you pretty seriously, I should judge. Now, I know Mrs. Brooks wouldn't want to prosecute anybody but I shall take this into my own hands, as the doctor's friend. However, I will compromise with her gentleness by giving you just twenty-four hours to make restitution of everything. You know what it all is without my explaining. Now go!"

Giles slunk from the room. The young man went to the old doctor's wife and took her hand.

"I am glad," he said, "more than I can tell at the way things are coming out."

"And I am glad, too," she returned, her eyes shining, "not so much for myself, for I shall be going to the doctor pretty soon. But he would rather have it this way."

Temperance societies in Siam, of which many mission-school pupils are enthusiastic supporters, are receiving much encouragement from the attitude of the new king of Siam. In a recent speech to the Tiger Cubs—the Siamese name for Boy Scouts—he told them that they should not drink or smoke if they wished to become the sort of men of whom Siam could be proud.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

THE NIGHTMARE

In many sections of the country it is customary for people subject to nightmare to sleep with a pair of scissors or a knife under the pillow as a preventive against the affliction. In some sections they will tell you that the nightmare is caused "by an evil spirit struggling with one."

This conception of nightmare as an evil spirit is a conception of primitive man and one which exists in the mimicism of primitive races today, as well as among the superstitions of the civilized peoples. And anyone who has ever experienced nightmare cannot wonder. Shakespeare, in a song in "King Lear," makes St. Withold say when he meets "the nightmare and her nine fold," "Aroint thee, witch! arroint thee!" and the first definition of nightmare given by the Century dictionary is "An incubus, or evil spirit that oppresses people during sleep." Some of us may be content to ascribe our nightmare to a poorly-made Welsh rarebit instead of a witch or an evil spirit but not so our ancestors or our more superstitious neighbors.

In folklore, then, the nightmare being a witch or an evil spirit, what is more potent to keep it away than a piece of cold iron which, as is well known, from the beginning of the iron age witches and evil spirits have abhorred and feared? The reason for the fear and abhorence of iron by evil spirits has brought forth much discussion. The belief began when man first tried to work iron ore into a usable metal and from the superstition under consideration, and from numerous other current superstitions, we see that is has not entirely vanished.

Today Chevrolet presents the crowning triumph of 16 years' continuous progress—

—a great new automobile, so impressive in appearance, performance and staunchness that it marks the opening of a new era of luxurious transportation at low cost!

When you see this new car your first exclamation will be one of unqualified admiration. For here is a Bigger and Better Chevrolet, more beautiful, more luxurious than you ever thought possible at such a low price!

Built on a 107-inch wheelbase—4 inches longer than before—it is impressively large, low and racy. The hood streams back in graceful, unbroken lines from the higher, narrower radiator and blends flawlessly into the contours of the marvelous new Fisher bodies. All models are finished in fashionable new colors of genuine Duco—and the rich new upholsteries, the indirectly lighted instrument panel and the handsome appointments create an atmosphere of interior luxury as gratifying as it is unique.

Such distinguished beauty alone would make the new Chevrolet a truly sensational achievement. But in addition it offers a type of big car performance once thought impossible in a low-priced automobile.

It is powered by an improved valve-in-head engine—which embodies such impressive features as alloy "invar strut" pistons, hydro-laminated camshaft gears, mushroom type valve tappets, AC oil filter and AC air cleaner. The chassis, also, has been redesigned.

As a result, the new Chevrolet provides delightful smoothness throughout the entire speed range—a wide margin of power for hills—click-of-the-heel acceleration—the ability to maintain 50, 55 and 60 miles an hour without the slightest sense of forcing or fatigue—the safety of non-locking four-wheel brakes—the steering ease that can only result from a ball bearing worm and gear steering mechanism—and comfort over all roads at all speeds, due to semi-elliptic shock absorber springs—84% of the wheelbase.

No recounting of engineering features and advanced manufacturing practices could possibly convey the true importance of this announcement. So we urge you to visit the nearest Chevrolet dealer—see the car—and learn how Chevrolet has again electrified America by creating a bigger and better motor car and offering it at prices so low as to be actually amazing!

BROWNIE'S WINTER TRIP

"I'm going on a little winter trip today," said Billie Brownie to Peter Gnome.

He had just met Peter Gnome right on the outskirts of Brownieland.

"What are you about to do, Peter?" Billie asked. "I don't mean to be rude, but I'm aways interested in your adventures."

"I have a meeting today at the Every-Day-Is-Nice-Day club," said Peter. "Sorry you cannot come to the meeting. But, of course, you don't need to come! You think every day is nice, anyway."

"Sorry, too, I cannot come," said Billie Brownie. "You see, I am taking so many trips these days—getting to know so many of the children of dear old Mother Nature.

"Today she suggested that I should take a winter trip and meet some of the winter birds, I believe. Couldn't you come, too?"

"I don't believe I possibly could," said Peter Gnome. "But when you come back from your trip, won't you come and give us a talk about winter birds?"

"Gladly, gladly,' said Billie Brownie.

And then they shook hands, hugged each other and went in different directions, each shouting after the other:

"Then I'll see you soon again!"

"Hello, Billie Brownie!" said a voice, and, looking about, Billie Brownie saw his friend, Judge Just Praise.

Judge Just Praise is a great Believer in praising and encouraging.

He doesn't think there is enough praising of creatures. He says it makes people do much better in their work and in their studies and in their conduct—in everything—to be praised and encouraged once in a while.

"Hello, Judge!" said Billie Brownie.

"I just saw a lovely collie dog being given a collar with a silver plate attached, upon which was the collie's name and some nice words about the dog," said the judge.

"That collie," Judge Just Praise continued, 'saved a great many people in a bad fire. Oh, that dog was a splendid hero, and it delighted my heart to see the reward being given.

"And then I also saw a big St. Bernard dog—they're so splendid!—save a cat from burning.

"The dog had awakened the different members of the family.

"Then he had noticed that the cat was missing. Back into the burning house he had gone to come forth a little later carrying his cat friend in his mouth. The cat was frightened, but not hurt.

"And that dog is going to be rewarded for saving the lives of all the family—the cat, too! I heard some one say that he would be given a medal. If he had not awakened the family when he did the flames would have kept them from being able to escape out of the house.

"But now I must be on my way. Hope to see you soon, Billie."

Then Billie Brownie met groups of the winter birds.

"We're the American Crossbills," the American Crossbills chirped. "We sing and we twitter and we fly off and then fly back again without any special reason—just for fun.

"We don't believe in doing everything for a special reason. But we are fond of pine cones and our crossed bills or overlapping bills make it easy for us to pull the pine cones apart so we can reach the seeds."

"We're somewhat alike," said the White-Winged Crossbills, "only you don't see so many of us. Some winters we don't appear at all."

"I wear a lovely rose-colored costume," said Mr. White-Winged Crossbill, "and the Mrs. White-Winged Crossbill wears yellow. It is something the same with the American Crossbills, though the Mr. American Crossbills wear more of a brownish-red costume, and my favorite color is rose."

Then Billie Brownie met the Chickadees, the Song Sparrows and the Cedar Waxwings, and they all told him they liked to be about in the winter, but they did love to have some delicacies left about for them.

Mother's Cook Book

What silences we keep, year after year.
With those who are most near to us and dear.
We live beside each other day by day.
And speak of myriad things, but seldom say
The full sweet word that lies just in our reach
Beneath the commonplace of common speech.

FOOD FOR CHILLY DAYS

With the chilly days we like a dish of scrapple for breakfast.

Scrapple

Scrub four pig's feet and put them with two pounds of liver into a kettle and cover with boiling water. Boil one-half hour, then simmer in a fireless cooker for eight to ten hours or on the back of the range until night. If the cooker is used, reheat and put back in the cooker until morning. In the morning remove the fat and take the meat from the bones and chop. Strain the liquor and bring to the boiling point, add corn meal and cook as mush, a long slow cooking. Stir in the chopped meat just before taking from the fire, add seasonings of salt and pepper and pour the scrapple into greased bread pans to mold. When cold cut into slices and fry in fat.

Hot Potato Salad

To six cupfuls of hot sliced potatoes add two teaspoonfuls of salt, one-half teaspoonful of paprika, one small grated onion, one-half cupful of mild vinegar, two tablespoonfuls of chopped parsley and one cupful of heavy cream. Mix with silver forks lightly. Serve cold with sliced smoked tongue. A tablespoonful of any good salad dressing may be added to the cream if desired. Prepare this salad allowing it to stand for a half day to season.

Ice-Box Cookies

Take one cupful each of brown sugar, white sugar and butter, two well-beaten eggs, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of salt, four and one-half cupfuls of flour, one cupful of coarsely chopped nut meats with flavoring to taste. Mix and roll into a roll as round as possible and place in the ice chest over night. In the morning slice into very thin slices and bake in a hot oven.

Do not waste the liquor from sauerkraut. It is an invaluable aid for the digestive tract and good for the blood. Take two tablespoonfuls before meals.

Persian Christians in Meshed are learning to share the reponsibility of the work of the church. Recently the local church divided with the mission the expense of two evangelistic tours, one of six weeks and one of three months. On its own account this church paid the expenses of an evangelistic worker who went to the neighboring town of Nishabur to conduct the services of the week of prayer for a small Christian group there.

VELVET PLAYS ITS PART FOR JUVENILE ENSEMBLES

For grown-ups to monopolize all the beautiful velvet in the world would not be playing quite fair. So Dame Fashion is seeing to it that tiny tots get their share of this beautiful fabric.

Being midwinter, interest centers about coats of velvet with hats to match. The little girl to the left in the picture has reason to feel pretty much "dressed up," clad as she is in a black velvet coat which is collared and cuffed in spotted ermine. The crowning glory of this little miss is her hat which is of matching velvet with wee ermine tails. That the ensemble idea has invaded the realm of childhood's fashions is a fact emphasized throughout the displays in shops and departments devoted to apparel for little folks.

Just because a little girl is not rich is no reason for her not becoming the owner of just such a pretty velvet ensemble as the shown here. That is if mother happens to be the kind who delights in making wee daughter's dresses and coats and such. Just a remnant of velvet will suffice for the coat and the cunning shirred hat can be made of the "left-over" pieces. Fortunately it happens to be just the time of year when the stores are offering wonderful bargains in short lengths of velvet.

To some mothers the idea of a cloth coat trimmed with velvet has a direct appeal for the reason that such a coat can be worn throughout all the spring month, if it be not too heavily interlined. A very charming styling is suggested in the coat pictured to the right. Scalloped suede-finished cloth overlays a deep velvet bordering up and down the front opening. The buttons also add a pleasing trimming touch.

An outstanding instance of the ensemble theme is that of the tailored wool chinchilla cloth outfits which both little boys and little girls are wearing. These include coats, single or double breasted, hats with a wee rolling rim and leggins which have zipper fastenings.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

THE LOGICAL SEX

About the oldest tradition in the world is the one that describes the "race of men" as the logical sex.

The masculine human being is convinced that he solves his problems by reasoning with himself about them.

On the other hand, he is convinced that the female of the species is simply guided by instinct.

This is in spite of the fact that all over the world, from China to Peru, when it comes to the question of feminism, the men lay down a general proposition and then proceed to evade it.

In a word, women and men are "equal." But man's prejudices must not be interfered with. He still reserves to himself the right to protect and regulate the other half of humanity.

Women have the right to vote at elections all over the continent of North America. They may be admitted to the bar and plead before the courts. But the question whether or not they should be allowed to sit on juries is not yet settled in most of the states.

Various reasons are given by those who oppose the change.

When it is examined the opposition is found to be based on the theory that the gentle sex must be regulated as it has been in the past.

An interesting example of masculine logic is supplied by the German republic.

In the constitution of that state it is provided explicitly that men and women have the same rights and, apart from fighting, must perform the same duties.

Yet when the proposal to make women eligible for jury duty came up before the federal council in the form of the proposed draft of a law, it was negatived.

The explanation given by Herr Von Preger, the Bavarian representative, ought to be framed and hung up in every woman's club in the world as an example of how not to reason.

"The Bavarian government," he said, "maintains the principal standpoint that women are not suited to judicial office. The admission of women would result in a softening of justice, which is most undesirable just at this time."

So it all comes to this: Women may elect those who make the laws; they may expound the same laws; but they are not fit to decide simple questions of fact arising in connection with the administration of the laws.

When Mrs. Poyser made the tart generalization that the women were made fools "to match the men" she was really unnecessaryily severe on the long suffering sisterhood.

Ninety miles from the Gulf of Akaba, the eastern arm of the Red Sea, is the Arabian desert city of Petra, which British archaeologists will soon explore. The city is carved out of sandstone cliffs, and the only approach to it is through a defile twelve feet wide between high rocks which almost meet overhead. Petra is deserted, and explorers have seldom entered it because of the danger from hostile Bedouins. It was the Edomite capital in Old Testament times. There are many "high places" where those early inhabitants worshipped. There are temples of Egyptian and Graeco-Roman architecture, and the ruins of a Crusader's castle. The temples are carved out of the sandstone rock, whose natural colors are soft

A twenty-three foot python from India upon its arrival at the Philadelphia zoo was unpacked by nine men who, by their united effort, were able to handle it in such a way as to render it virtualy harmless. Since it kills its enemies by crushing them in its coils, it is mastered when kept extended at full length, for it is not venomous.

AN INNER TUBE FOR PACKING

Old inner tubes strong enough to hold air, yet not substantial enough to withstand great pressure necessary for riding make excellent packing aids for moving time. Glassware, bric-a-brac, pottery, etc., will come through safely, even with the rough handling of shipping if an inner tube is wound around it, and the other spaces in the box filled with newspapers.

The inner tube if suffering with a blowout, can be cut at this point, and the remaining good part tied firmly. In cases of fever these long tubes can be filled with ice to be placed by the body of the patient to cool him, or with hot water to warm him. On the automobile tour the damaged inner tube can be cut so that the good remaining part can be tied and made into a good hot water bag, filled with hot water from the radiator. In case of earache, shock from accident, or neuralgic pain, this is a valuable aid.

A patched inner tube which will hold air makes a good animal trainer for dogs or cats to jump through. They will not be injured by the tube as they might be by wooden hoops or metal ones, hence fear will be done away with in the training.

GOLD RUSHES

It has been a long time since the world has witnessed such a gold rush as that which took thousands of people to the Klondike, most of them to return broken in health, or poverty stricken.

But gold rushes of various kinds follow every reported story of the get rich-quick variety.

Not long ago a young man, who had never been heard of before, swam the Santa Catalina channel, off southern California.

For the swim he got a prize of $25,000, and because of the celebrity he earned he was able to make $1,000 a day by exhibiting himself for some weeks afterward.

The prize was offered for just one swim—for the first successful effort to master the channel.

Shortly after this channel feat, a prominent American baseball player was signed to play with a ball team for a salary as great as that which is paid President Coolidge.

That will set more boys to trying to be ball players, and take them from useful work, for which they are fitted.

The very fact that a great prize was offered for swimming the Santa Catalina channel is proof that only a very few people, possessing singular endurance, can accomplish such a feat.

The combination of strength, quickness of eye and co-ordination which makes a remarkable baseball player is rare. It is a gift which nature has bestowed upon him.

To seek to emulate such qualities is worse than useless.

"Trade Your Smiles."

As well seek to emulate the circus giant or the human skeleton.

• • •

To the average person success of any sort means slow, patient effort, abundance of hard work and determination.

But these are tedious and laborious.

It looks so much easier to swim a channel or to play remarkable baseball, or to achieve distinction by some unusual way, that every time athletic celebrities are spoken of in the paper, great numbers of people begin to seek their laurels.

People differ in brain quality, but most of them can be more successful and more useful than they are if they will try to improve by ways which are perfectly possible.

As long as they join every gold rush they will always face disappointment, always nurse a grievance because somebody else seems to be luckier than they.

It is lucky, of course, to be born with some unusual quality, but success can be secured without that kind of luck and is constantly secured by people who never join a gold rush.

Try Haunts Grocery & Meat Markets.

The position of Swan Island, at Portland, Oregon, has recently been changed by dredging. This island had been "forcing the main flow of the Willamette river into a narrow and crooked channel, where marine disasters were frequent." After the dredging was completed, the island, according to the original plan, was to be used as a freight-terminal site, but it was later decided that the island is an ideal site for an air port which was in demand for the coastwise mail, and is to be used for that purpose. The island as an air port has the advantages of "easy visibility from the air, even in thick weather,. ease of access (there being no obstructions in the aerial approaches), and better meteorological conditions than at any other location in the Portland area. Also it will be but one and a half miles from the city."

2000 at "Y" Open House

More than 2000 persons attended the annual New Year's open house held at the Central Y. M. C. A. Monday from 2 to 7 p. m.

One of the features of the day was the basket ball game between the team that represented the association in 1926 and the present team, the latter winning by a score of 46 to 36.

Mr. and Mrs. James A. Hill and son Raymond, spent a part of the holidays the guests of Mrs. Clara Sprouse of Commercial Point, Ohio.

Gasoline Tax to Net 25 Millions in 1928

Ohio motorists will pay approximately $25,000,000 in gasoline taxes during 1928, State Treasurer Buckley estimates, basing his calculation on gas taxes collected during the last half of 1927.

An instrument called the telechronometer measures telephone conversations in terms of the "telechrone," equal to one minute, and the "telo," to fifteen seconds, of conversation. This instrument discourages useless talk on the wires. Charges for the time consumed are computed monthly according to the meter readings. In Everett, Washington, where this ingenious invention of Charles M. Beattie and Garrison Babcock has recently been tried out with great success, telephone rates are said to have been reduced forty per cent, while the number of subscribers has doubled since its installation.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

THE "MANSARD" ROOF

We are all familiar with the mansard roof, which is constructed with a break in the steep sides of the ordinary A-shaped roof so that each side has two planes, which makes the rooms underneath habitable and eliminates the useless garret found under the other style of roof. Some of us have used the name "mansard" roof without knowing the origin of the term.

The "mansard" roof is named after Nicholas Francois Mansart, a famous French architect, who lived from 1598 to 1666. At the height of his influence Mansart designed most of the important public buildings erected at the time in Paris, as well as the famous chateau of Maison-sur-Seine for Louis XIV. His work is noted for its classical refinement and purity of detail. And one detail of his origination which has familiarized his name these many years to people who have no interest in the history of architecture is the now popular, though misspelled, mansard roof!

Independance

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

We used to dream of merry days,
The lands to see, the things to do—
And then suddenly we grew
So busy in so many way
Youth slipped away before we knew.

So many things our hearts concerned,
So much of toil, so many cares,
To build the house, to sweep the stairs—
Returnig tasks with day returned
And life slipped by us unawares.

But now we dream of other years,
Of later years, of quiet age:
Ahead we see the final page—
And yet how fair that page appears,
No more concerned with work or wage.

For now we put a little by
So when we weary we may rest;
And, though the sun is in the west,
We still are dreaming, she and I,
And often think this dream the best—

Of days when we may take our time,
Together face the fading light,
And have a little fire at night,
A cottage where the roses climb,
When limbs grow weary, temples white.

And none shall say, "They're very old,"
And none shall say, "They're quite a care."
We've saved a little here and there,
And just as high our heads we'll hold
As in the days when days were fair.

CREDIT—AND BUSINESS

Each year credit is becoming more and more important as a factor in business. From the greatest industry down the line to the man who uses his credit to buy his weekly grocery needs, credit is a factor of dominating interest to one and all.

Naturally, when a certain business activity becomes a part and parcel of your own daily life, we are interested in knowing as much as possible about it.

Of first importance to each of us, whether we are in the habit of making daily use of our credit, is the maintaining of our credit rating upon the highest plane.

When we find it necessary to make use of our credit is not always known—and the occasion may arise almost at any moment's notice. Then if we have taken the precaution to maintain our credit, we will find our fellow townsmen glad to aid us in every way they can.

It certainly pays to keep your credit good.

DON'T BE A GROUCH

Don't be sour. To be sour is to find fault with everybody except oneself. It is being mad at the world. No one loves a sour fellow. One feels like kicking him. Grouchy folks are just about as welcome as a pickle is to a man with the mumps. You call for bread and they give you a green persimmon.

The opposite of this barbed-wire condition of soul is the even-tempered disposition—a sweetness of thought turned toward the world. Such a disposition is golden. A man even tho of mediocre ability can do more business with it, make more friends, insure more happiness than a grouchy, sour individual can the possessed of great power of intellect.

You all can call to mind some one out of your circle of acquaintances whose natural kindness of heart, broad human sympathies and deep faith in humanity help to sweeten life and make all who know him only a little like him and all who know him well to love him. Their life reveals to their fellows that there is something in the world better than gold.

Let the H. L. Menkens and the Sinclair Lewises rave on in their cynical sordidness but there is in spite of it all more good than evil in the world. All lawyers are not Clarence Darrows; all preachers are not Elmer Gantrys; all public officials are not grafters, nor all bank cashiers embezzlers.

There are thousands of men and women all around you "unhonored and unsung" who are honest to the core, whose consciences are steady and in whom the current of everlasting life runs deep and strong.

Life is too short to harbor spite and ill-will and to be forever standing guard to "come back" at some one whom we imagine has harmed us. Let a little sunshine of smiles in upon your steam-heated grouch. Let the corners of your mouth turn upward, pull your face out of the dust and lift your eyes toward the stars. It is another New Year and a new page in life's ledger.

SCHOOL LUNCH FACTS

By EVANGELINE HARRINGTON
of West High School

Within the last 20 years, the lunch system has become a recognized part of the modern school-system. Today, practically any school in America or Europe has some form of noon lunch served at the building.

In Germany, the first provision for meals in public schools was made in Munich in 1790. Municipal soup kitchens were started as part of the international campaign against vagrancy by Count Rumford, a well-known scientist and economist. The kitchens were designed to feed people of all ages, and from the start, the schools were encouraged to send groups of children to them for a warm meal at noon. The children paid or not as they were able. This work, which antidated compulsory education was unorganized for a time but it was never discontinued.

A century later the obligation of providing meals for school children was put upon the school authorities. Now there is a municipal order in Munich requiring that every new school-house erected shall have a kitchen and dining room. Thus begun, the school lunch movement has spread throughout the German Empire, until now it is national in scope. Practically all the cities contribute wholly or in part to the support of school breakfast and lunches.

Lower Animals Seem to Know Life's Duty

Perhaps the inclusive term "individualism" is the one which will best describe the attitude toward living which is most characteristically human.

The animal, absorbed as he is in the business of arranging for the survival of himself and his kind, seems far less capable than man of distinguishing between himself and his race. We need not naively attribute to him any philosophy in order to explain his behavior, but it is evident that he acts as though he had arrived at that attitude which is accounted by some exponents of social ethics as the ultimate human ideal, and which consists in an identification with society so close as to make meaningless any distinction between private and public good.

He does not ask what he gets out of life, nor why he should sacrifice himself in the laborious business of continuing it. The lair or the nest is prepared, and the young are born. They are nourished, defended, given such education as they need, and then, when the time comes, the parents die quietly, quite as though they were as completely aware as Mr. Shaw's "ancients" that the important thing is, not that any individual should have arrived at any "fulfillment" of his own, but that life should go on.

Yet, though something of this kind has been often enough described as the highest human virtue, the human being seems incapable of consciously achieving what the animal possesses as part of his natural endowment.—Joseph Wood Krutch in the Atlantic Monthly.

Nashua Part-Wool Blankets, $3.95; a $5.95 value.—Seiller's.

The number of boys and girls who are independently earning all or part of their own way through college has become astonishingly large, says The World Review. Recent figures show that no less than 60,000 students in 129 American colleges and universities are defraying all or part of their expenses through their own efforts. This means 30 per cent of the entire enrollment and includes both men and women.

SOMETHING ELSE

The vicar's wife was enthusiastic and appreciative about the new curate, and when she called on an old lady parishioner she turned the conversation in his direction.

"You know," she said, "he is capable in so many ways, but what I like about him most of all is that he is a real altruist."

"I'm surprised to hear that,' 'exclaimed the old lady, "for I heard him singing last Sunday, and I could declare he was a tenor."—Weekly Scotsman.

Leap Year

"One day more, we add to it, each year in four." This is the sign of a number of things. It means that the donkey and the elephant bray and bellow for the presidential positions, that the fair sex has its big opportunity, and that those having birthdays on February 29 put forth all efforts to celebrate for four years in one.

• • • •

There will be a lot of leaping done this year and with all the progress the "sweet young things" have had in the past few years there will be little doubt that they will miss their marks.

• • • •

It's a good thing to aim high or to hitch your wagon to a star but it is also a wise plan to tackle low and hard and to make connections with a limousine if possible.

• • • •

But every good debater has a rebuttal and we expect to hear some S. Y. T. say that the wagon to the star is the safest since there is less danger of having to walk home.

• • • •

They say that everything comes to those who wait. To the old maid and the bashful suitor this means leap year. To those who have loved and lost it means another possibility.

• • • •

There will be a big race this year between those who leap into marriage and those who are leaping out. An observation of the number of marriage licenses granted and the number of divorces issued is very close at present. There may be a rise in the former when the S. Y. T.'s have been in the field long enough.

• • • •

We predict that the stir raised by the question of companionate marriage will continue to hold interest until after leap year. There may be some element in the approach to the question that will lead to the companionate part.

• • • •

As yet Lindbergh hasn't signified his willingness to give the fair sex his attentions but we wager that he will be in the air more than ever this year because of the clamoring for his hand.

• • • •

This being a forward year for women the possibilities of more feminine politicians presents itself. Their freedom of speech will be a big asset.

• • • •

Statistical reporters who make the reports of the condition of the country for 1928 and give their summary of events for the year will have an interesting topic in the form of the number of applications for licenses issued at the requests of those who clamour for women's rights—and get their men.

• • • •

The women in 1928 will adopt the slogan of the Canadian Mounted Police—"Get your man."

• • • •

All indications are that this will be a big year in all fields. Politics will play their part when the Democrats and the Republicans begin their peanut race for the Whitehouse, there promises to be another upset in the literary field when we are confronted with Sinclair Lewis' latest dullness, and there is a big chance of another auto sensation when the major elements begin their fight for supremacy.

VILLAGE TO BE RAZED

Much to the consternation of some of the oldest residents, picturesque Garscadden, Scotland, is to be demolished. The county council decided some time ago that the houses were beyond repair, and allocated about 100 houses in the new Duntocher scheme to the tenants. Removal notices are being served on Garscadden families as the new houses become ready for occupancy. Garscadden, until a little more than 20 years ago, was a thriving mining village and is composed of five typical "miner's rows" comprising 168 houses of one, two and three of opinion among the villagers over apartments. There is a sharp division the action of the county council.

JOSEPHINE AND JOE RETURN

University Enrollment Near 10,000 Mark; Campus Styles Are Changed.

There's an end to everything and this applies to vacation periods more noticeably than most other things so says Joe and Josephine College as they gather their books for the cold morning classes of the winter quarter at Ohio State university.

Classes at the university began last Wednesday morning after the ten-day vacation period had terminated. On Tuesday all fees were due and those failing to supply the needed cash were fined $5 per day for every day they waited. A survey shows nearly 300 paid the penalty by waiting and paying. Total registration for the winter quarter reached 9075 at the end of the fourth day of the new year.

This figure is over 1000 less than the number enrolled for the fall work For those who do not know the workings of the big state school we might clear up the situation by stating that a few of these were lost by graduation but an even greater number were gained by new comers. Most of the loss in numbers was due to the attack of professor's grading pencils as the final exam papers were scrutinized. Many others just decided that they should stay home "for their health."

On Wednesday, the first issue of the Lantern, university daily, made its appearance in the new year but no proficient journalistic qualities were taxed for the first few issues due to the lack of organized staffs. All staff assignments were made by Monday, however, and the wheels of the campus news sheet began to pour out the work of the budding journalists again.

Dr. J. H. Nichols, head of the department of physical education issued a statement on Wednesday that during the 10 years he had been in the department he had examined 20,000 men students and his observation is that the student of today is much superior in physical appearance and muscular development than the student of 10 years ago.

The star gazing public was invited to the university observatory on Thursday evening but a series of drifting clouds spoiled the view and a closer observation of Jupiter and the moon was postponed. Another opportunity will be given on January 18.

Joe and Josephine attended the game at the coliseum to see Princeton defeat State by one point. It was thrilling to the finish and almost resulted in a comeback after the drubbing the Tigers gave the Buckeyes in football.

Campus styles are somewhat changed after the holidays due to the increased number of coon skin coats, black derbies and flashy ties that were given at Christmas time. Speaking of fur coats brings up the question of what will happen in collegiate circles since the majority of the eastern schools have dubbed them as out of style. It seems highly probable that the style may continue in force until the new coats have been tried out for a while. Galoshes for the men during the snowy weather are also very popular at O. S. U.

University activities were again well under way at the end of the first week and fraternity and sorority groups began to figure out their social functions for the quarter.

A thousand miles of railroad are to be built in Australia, closing the gap between the north and the south, linking Adelaide with Darwin, the tropical port. The new railway replacing the camel caravans will open up a wide territory now undeveloped and will probably stimulate agriculture, stock-raising, mining, and other industries.

MEETING HER TIM'S MOTHER

Judith Wellmore pulled her black hat over her tight brown braids. She almost wished that she had her thick locks shorn when Dencey had fallen for the convenient bob. With leisure at a minimum and the mercury at its highest braids were a nuisance. Besides, as Dencey declared, they stamped her as old-fashioned, than which nowadays nothing was more inexcusable.

Yet Tim Haldane had asked her to marry him. As she walked out of the office building and waited at the corner for her car she watched a knot of her compatriots, chic and vivacious, and compared herself with them. Incredible that Jim had chosen her. There must have been a number of other girls he might have had for he was so fine and winning that no girl could resist him. Even Dencey said so, and for Dencey to say a thing of that kind meant much, for Dencey, eighteen and modernly sophisticated, had a discriminating taste in heroes.

No, Judith decided, as the car bore her through the burning streets, she would never be able to understand Tim's selection of her, but whatever his reason his mother would be sure not to agree with him; she might accept her son's choice of a wife but she would never approve of it.

Judith dreaded to meet Tim's mother. In fact, dread had all day been accumulating into something like panic for that evening she was to face her ordeal. Of course, it had to come some time, but why should it come this evening? There had been extra work at the office and she was tired. Moreover, her mother was not well and she and Dencey had been doing the housework for a few days.

Tim's mother! Judith could visualize her easily from her knowledge of Tim. Slender, tall and fair, of course, mothish, perhaps even with a fondness for French toiletries. Tim had not told her. "I'll let you form your own picture of her and see how near you come to getting it right," he had said laughingly. Then his mother came on from the West to live with him at the Ardmore until his marriage with Judith, when he planned to have a home, a small house somewhere on a quiet street. Meanwhile, Judith and his mother must get acquainted, and so he had arranged a dinner for them at the Ardmore as the easiest way of accomplishing what he desired.

Upon opening the door of the small apartment Judith beheld a guest seated beside her mother on the sofa. Aunt Ida Stanley, her father's sister, had dropped in for a visit! Tim was nervous, she was talking as fast as she could.

"Why? Here's our Judy! You look warm, Judy. Look out for blood pressure. Now, with me I am below normal—simply have to have heat. This is the first time I've felt really comfortable this summer."

Judith smiled faintly. In the kitchen Dencey was struggling with a can opener. It slipped and Dencey gave a cry of pain.

"Let me take it," Judith said. She looked dubiously at the can. "What else for lunch, dear?"

"Nothing much. She took us unawares. It's your afternoon out, isn't it? And you're going out to dinner tonight. Lucky you!"

"I am not so sure about that. Tim's mother may not like me."

"It would be horrid if she didn't, there are plenty of eggs, Judith."

"I'll make an omelet."

After all luncheon was something more than presentable and Aunt Ida arose refreshed and fortified.

"Now, I'm going out to get me a new hat and dress," she announced. "There isn't a decent hat in Packville. Brings in—well, I may be thin enough to be fashionable, but I simply won't. As for the dresses Andrew Miller expose my arms and legs—

"Judy! Call a cab. And get ready to go with me. I'll need some piloting."

"It is very hot, auntie," Judith protested faintly.

"Shucks! There's electric fans. Come, call that cab!"

Shopping with a woman whose temperature was below normal and who insisted on getting what she wanted at a price she was willing to pay gave Judith one of the most trying afternoons she had ever experienced. At last she sank down upon a divan and while Aunt Ida tried on dresses held her handbag.

"I'm coming up again to see you married and I want something decent to wear," she commented.

Sitting thus, Judith became aware that a woman had sat down beside her; the woman was elderly, plain and a bit old-fashioned. She clutched her purse tightly and looked about her with a little air of helpless bewilderment. Her upper lip was white in that way which indicates heart weakness.

"It is very hot, isn't it?" she said to Judith. "I feel the heat terribly. I don't think I should have ventured out. Trying on dresses, too." She gave a little gasp and closed her eyes.

Judith moved nearer and put her arm about the slight figure. Then remembering that Aunt Ida always carried a bottle of camphor, she took it from the handbag, saturated a handkerchief with it and held it to the fainting woman's nose.

"If you feel able—the restroom is near. Lying down a few moments will help you a lot, I think," she said.

Supporting the woman, she got her to the restroom, saw her made comfortable upon a couch and ran to the restaurant to get her a bracing cup of tea.

"And now I think you ought to have a cab and go home," Judith said.

"You are right, I am sure, but I do so hate to go without getting what I came after. You—you couldn't help me, could you, dear? You see, I simply must have a dress. I haven't a thing to wear and—and it's an important occasion. I looked at another store but I didn't find just what I wanted—something black and thin and—and dignified, not too new-fashioned, you know."

Judith had seen Aunt Ida discover and reject just such a dress. She patted the white hand reassuringly. How gentle and appealing this little lady was!

"Just sip your tea and I'll see what I can do," she promised.

She found the dress and a pleasant-faced fitter and within fifteen minutes the little lady, proud and happy over her purchase and, oh, so touchingly grateful to Judith for her assistance, went away in the cab. Judith returned to Aunt Ida.

"Well, here's what I got," she remarked. Judith said nothing. But she wondered at the lack of taste that lay behind the purchase. Still, if Aunt Ida was pleased—and she was.

They stopped at the delicatessen store and Judith purchased cold meat and rolls and fruit. Dencey would be able to assemble a respectable meal now.

Bathed, rested and clad charmingly Judith showed no effects of her afternoon's experience as she stepped into the car beside her fiance. But the dread of meeting her future mother-in-law harried her soul as she sat waiting in the lounge of the Ardmore for the presentation. Tim, after having fetched Judith, had excused himself and gone up to get his mother.

He was coming now, her wonderful lover! And leaning upon his arm was a small old lady in a simple yet beautiful black gown—the same lady—the same gown—

They stared at each other in delighted recognition. Then to Tim's amusement they kissed.

"Oh, my dear! And I so dreaded meeting you!" murmured Mrs. Haldane.

"I dreaded to meet you," replied Judith.

Jim put an arm about each.

"And I dreaded seeing you meet, but chance beat me to it," he chuckled.

Mother's Cook Book

We have not fulfilled every duty unless we have fulfilled that of being pleasant.

SEASONABLE FOODS

There is no vegetable nicer than well-baked hubbard squash. If one tires of that try:

Squash Souffle.

Take two cupfuls of mashed cooked squash, add gradually one cupful of cream; when well mixed add two well-beaten egg yolks, seasoning to taste, then fold in the stiffly beaten whites and bake in a moderate oven in a well-buttered pan.

Ice Box Rolls.

Dissolve two compressed yeast cakes in one-fourth of a cupful of water. To two cupfuls of boiling water add four tablespoonfuls of sweet lard, one-half cupful of sugar and one teaspoonful of salt. When cool add two beaten eggs and the yeast with four cupfuls of flour, mix and beat well and add two more cupfuls of flour, stirring well with a spoon until well mixed. Do not knead. Set away in the ice box, well covered. Three hours before the rolls are needed, take out bits of the dough; it will be hard to handle but grease the fingers well and handle quickly, using very little flour. Make into flat buns, leaving plenty of room to rise and spread. Cover well with melted lard; this keeps them moist and the tops from forming a crust and the rolls rise better. Bake in a hot oven. If properly made they will be as light and delicate as angelfood.

Chili Con Carni.

Take one and one-half pounds of fresh lean pork with some fat, one and one-half pounds of round steak, all put through a meat grinder. Brown three good-sized sliced onions, add the meat, a dried chili pepper, two quarts of tomato, two or three tablespoonfuls of chili powder with salt and peper to season. Simmer for three hours, then add two cans kidney beans and cook another half hour. Serve hot.

Curry of Rabbit.

Cut up the rabbit as for fricassee, brown well, add two medium-sized onions chopped and two tablespoonfuls of curry powder. Cook 15 minutes in a little fat, add a very little water, cover and cook until the rabbit is tender. More water may be added to keep the meat from burning, but only a tablespoonful at a time.

Grated fresh horseradish mixed with a little salt and lemon juice and thick cream added makes a delicious sauce to serve with steak or fish.

Gorgeous Embroidery Enriches Dressy Afternoon Frocks

Many an afternoon dress glories in the enrichment of fine needlepoint or if not that then solid chainstitch embroidery. A favorite method is to position this extremely decorative stitchery on the blouse or upper portion of the frock only, leaving the skirt entirely free from any suggestion of the colorful design.

Models which feature repeat motifs in connection with handsomely and intricately designed borderings are outstanding in the mode. The picture tells the story of the effectiveness of such an arrangement better than words. This very attractive gown is a French model fashioned of marine blue satin, embroidered most exquisitely in tones of blue, beige and rose. The eton effect gives opportunity to accent a border design as contrasting the all-over repeat motif on the blouse.

Some of the most striking afternoon costumes are of black satin embroidered in exceedingly brilliant shades. Sometimes the motifs take on a Chinese character, the border carrying out the exotic theme.

The idea of embroidering the bodice and not the skirt is expressed out in more ways than one. Smart frocks of either cloth, satin or crepe for daytime wear show clusters of fruit or flowers in repeat all over the bodice with borderings using the motif in solid form. The front opening at the neckline is usually elaborated with bordering down each side forming a medallion effect at its base.

Frequently the solid chain stitching is done in gold or silver metal thread, which is exceedingly attractive. Then again instead of silk floss or metal thread, the work is executed in tiny brass nailheads. Perhaps only single nailheads are dotted symetrically over the blouse, but the borderings and belt develop a solid design.

Evening frocks also carry out this treatment, substituting rhinestones for metal nailheads. The sparkling beauty of the "diamond" embroidered blouse is contrasted by the skirt which is left free from any suggestion of ornamentation, save that of intricate draping.

Women who can embroider are buying two piece frocks of plain satin, adding the embroidery touch themselves. A very clever idea is to embrider dots on the blouse in allover effect, outlining these with metal thread. One color can be used or the dots can begin in dark tones graduating to lighter colors as they approach the neckline.

Another interesting mode of decoration is that of handpainting. Tiny clusters of fruit painted in solid colors, outlined with bronze gold or silver are very effective. One need not necessarily pattern the entire blouse, a few clusters judiciously placed gives charming results.

Printed satin is a smart new fabric item this season. The fanciful satin-print is frequently used for the blouse, the satin skirt being in a solid color, the same tone as the background of the print.

FEATS OF LINDBERGH

Remarkable Year for Aviation—Efforts to Reduce Armaments Are Not Successful—Strained Relations In Europe—Presidential Politics and Doings of Congress—Mississippi Valley Devasted by Floods.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

"Lindbergh's year" might well be the designation given 1927, for it was distinguished especially by the achievements of that admirable young American aviator. His transatlantic flight, the first from America to Europe; his triumphant progress abroad and afterward in his home country, his nonstop flight to Mexico City, and his gallantry and modesty made him the most famous man of his time. Both before and after he winged his way to France numerous other transoceanic flights were attempted. Several of them succeeded, while many failed tragically.

Internationally, interest centered largely on efforts to bring about reduction of armaments. President Coolidge's invitation to the nations signatory to the Washington treaty to confer on means to extend the provisions of that pact was accepted only by Great Britain and Japan, and ended in complete failure. The League of Nations' preparatory disarmament commission was more or less busy throughout the year, but seemed to make little progress. Its December meeting was attended by Russian representatives who blandly proposed immediate and total disarmament. This plan was squelched and the matter of international security taken up. The league council, convening toward the close of the year, had to deal with the old quarrel between Poland and Lithuania and with strained relations between France and Italy. United States marines were busy helping suppress a revolutionary movement in Nicaragua and protecting our nationals in China.

At home the year was notable for the steady growth of our national economic prosperity, which, however, was halted in some sections by agricultural depression and by the devastating floods in the Mississippi valley.

INTERNATIONAL

At the opening of the year President Diaz of Nicaragua asked American aid against the Liberal rebels led by Doctor Sacasa, and naval forces and marines were promptly sent, since our rights to the Nicaragua canal route were deemed imperiled. After numerous skirmishes all Nicaraguans were ordered to surrender their arms to the American forces, and the backbone of the rebellion was broken in a battle at Ocotal in July. Encounters with scattered guerilla bands continued through the rest of the year. Relations between the United States and Mexico improved steadily and Dwight Morrow went down there as ambassador late in the fall with high hopes of settling all the differences amicably. Secretary of State Kellogg's plans for ending the Tacna-Arica dispute between Chile and Peru were rejected by the latter country in January.

The three-power conference on naval disarmament called by President Coolidge was held in Geneva. Practical agreement was reached concerning submarines, but Great Britain's demands in the matter of small cruisers could not be accepted by America and Japan, and American demands for eight-inch guns were rejected by the British, so the whole affair collapsed on August 4. Viscount Cecil was so incensed by the stubbornness of the British delegates that he resigned from the cabinet and from participation in the doings of the League of Nations. Soviet Russia, more and more taking part in international affairs, made small progress into the good graces of other powers. Her proposal in the disarmament conference of the league, mentioned above, was scoffed at as not only impracticable, but also as disingenuous. In February Britain warned Moscow to cease its anti-British propaganda, and in May the London police raided the Soviet trade headquarters and seized incriminating documents. The Russian representatives were deported and all relations between the two nations severed. Until late in the year the Soviet emissaries were active in keeping the Chinese civil war alive, though their efforts were scarcely needed. When the radical faction of the Chinese Nationalists was virtually suppressed by the moderate wing, the Bolsheviks had so few friends left that they practically withdrew from the country. The war in China was made an international affair by the attacks on foreigners and foreign concessions and the threats against the treaty ports. American, British, French and Japanese forces were sent there and are still there, for the end of the conflict is not in sight. It was complicated by Japan's determination to protect her nationals and large interests in Manchuria. No agreements with China could be made by the powers for there was no real central government of that distracted country.

Germany kept up her reparations payments, and her relations with France were bettered by a commercial treaty and semi-private trade pacts. On January 31 the interallied commission turned over the control of German disarmament to the League of Nations, and in August France agreed to reduce the occupational forces in the Rhineland.

France and Yugo-Slavia signed a treaty which Premier Mussolini thought was aimed at Italy, so he retaliated with a military pact between Italy and Albania which, he frankly stated, was designed to maintain Italian control of the Adriatic. There was much ill feeling, but little apparent danger of hostilities. Not so much could be said for the trouble between Poland and Lithuania. Each of these nations accused the other of fomenting plots against it, and the Lithuanians believed Premire Pilsudski had designs on their independence. Seizure of Vilna by Poland several years ago was the underlying cause of the row. Marshall Pilsudski and Premier Waldemaras of Lithuania went to Geneva and were persuaded to make a temporary peace agreement, the details of a permanent pact to be worked out later.

FOREIGN

Great Britain slowly but steadily recovered from the effects of the long coal strike. What that conflict did to the country was indicated by the fact that in January, for the first time in many years, the real balance of trade was against the British, the deficit amounting to $88,000,000. In April the government introduced a bill to amend rather drastically the law relating to trade unions and strikes. The measure was supported by the Conservatives as necessary for the defense of the existing political and social system; but it was assailed bitterly by all the forces of Labor, who asserted it was designed not to protect the state but to take away the rights won by the workers and to destroy the unions. After many weeks of violent debate the measure, considerably modified, was passed. Another plan of the government, proposed in June, was to reduce the number of peers in the house of lords, and at the same time to so strengthen the powers of that chamber that it would be an impregnable defense against the growing power of labor. This was so strongly opposed by the Socialists and Laborites that the scheme was abandoned for the present. In April, Chancellor of the Exchequer Churchill introduced the budget for the year, designed to meet a deficit of $110,000,000. Its proposals showed that despite her enormous burdens, Great Britain's financial position was fundamentally sound.

When the Dail Eireann or parliament of the Irish Free State met in June, De Valera and forty-four of his followers were excluded because they refused to take the oath of allegiance to King George. Later they changed their minds and were sworn in. The general elections in September gave the government a plurality of six votes, and President Cosgrave was reelected. In July Ireland was shocked by the assassination of Kevin O'Higgins, vice president and minister of justice. The murderers were not caught.

Canada's importance was considerably amplified by her election as a member of the council of the League of Nations, Senator Raoul Dandurand being given the seat, and by the sending of an American minister to Ottawa in the person of William Phillips. On July 1, the Dominion celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of its birth as a self-governing unit of the British empire. Ontario abandoned prohibition, and on June 1 substituted the system of selling liquor in government stores to persons possessing permits. Prince Edward Island, the smallest of the provinces, voted in June to remain dry.

That France is still nervously afraid of attacks from the East was made plain when the superior war council in February announced plans for the construction of defenses on the German and Italian frontiers calling for the expenditure of seven billion francs. The project will give France the most formidable frontier defenses in Europe. Parliament passed a bill in March providing for nationalization of all needful industry in time of war, and in April President Doumergue signed a bill under which France will build one cruiser, six destroyers, five submarines and other war craft. Premier Poincare, despite constant opposition in parliament, maintained his prestige, and his financial measures proved so successful that many wondered why he did not proceed to the stabilization of the franc.

Under the firm hand of Mussolini the Fascist state of Italy began to function fully in 1927. Measures that, though severe, seem wholesome were put in force from time to time and the country prospered, beyond doubt of the destructors of the Duce. In April, the premier proclaimed a Fascist "charter of labor," which was regarded as a substitution of the principle of co-operation for that of competition, and thus a step in the abolition of class struggle.

King Ferdinand of Rumania died on July 20 and his grandson, the infant Michael, was proclaimed his successor under a regency. Friends of Carol, former crown prince and father of the child king, stirred up a lot of excitement and trouble with schemes to bring him back from exile and put him on the throne, but little came of it. In November Premier Ionel Bratiano, unrelenting enemy of Carol, died and was succeeded temporarily by his brother. Bloody revolts by Communists in Vienna and by Royalists in Portugal were suppressed in the summer. In Soviet Russia Stalin and his associates undertook to squelch utterly the opposition faction and Leon Trotsky and his followers were expelled from the Communist party.

President Calles of Mexico continued his suppression of the Catholic opponents to his rule. Many prelates were arrested on charges of sedition, and in April Archbishop Mora y del Rio and others were expelled from the country.

Mexico's most serious revolutionary movement came in October and was led by Generals Gomez and Serrano, both rivals of General Obregon for the Presidency. Within a few weeks the movement had been effectually put down and Gomez, Serrano and many others had been executed by firing squads. President Figueroa of Chile was forced out of office by Premier Ibanez, who was later elected to succeed him.

Virtual collapse of the Kuomintang revolution in China, so far as achieving its objective was concerned, marked the year in the Oriental republic. The Nationalist party was hopelessly split into factions, while Marshall Chang maintained his supremacy in Peking and was reported to be preparing to proclaim himself emperor. The civil warfare went on unceasingly without definite result.

DOMESTIC

Generally speaking, conditions were conducive to a prosperous year in the United States. Industry and commerce flourished and the government piled up a huge reserve that made a reduction of taxes a certainty. Adverse features were the unprecedented floods in the Mississippi valley, continued through somewhat ameliorated depression in the agricultural industries, the long coal strike in the bituminous fields which was ended in several states in the autumn, and a strike of coal miners in Colorado under leadership of the I. W. W.

Presidential politics occupied the minds of the people to a considerable extent. President Coolidge, it was conceded, could have the Republican nomination for the asking, but during his vacation in the Black Hills of South Dakota he rather astonished the nation by issuing the simple statement: "I do not choose to run for President in 1928." Thus the race was made an open one, though many of Mr. Coolidge's admirers insisted that he would accept the nomination if "drafted" by the party. Of the other possibilities those most favorably considered were Frank O. Lowden, Herbert Hoover and Vice President Charles Dawes. Charles T. Hughes also was liked, by many. Senator Charles Curtis of Kansas announced that he was a candidate for the honor, and a boom for Senator George Norris of Nebraska was started by some of his fellow "insurgents." Senator Willis of Ohio threw his hat into the ring after the President in December told the national committee he had "eliminated" himself.

Kansas City was awarded the Republican national convention after a spirited contest with San Francisco, and the call was issued for June 12.

Al Smith, at his fourth inauguration as governor of New York, declared his candidacy for the Democratic nomination and throughout the year he seemed to gain steadily in strength. Of course most of the drys in his party opposed him and they sought for a rival candidate to take the place of W. G. McAdoo. The best they could find, apparently, was Senator James Reed of Missouri.

In February congress passed the McNary-Haugen farm relief bill and President Coolidge promptly vetoed it because he and his official advisers considered it economically bad. During the year the various agricultural organizations tried to get together on some measure that would serve their needs and meet the President's objections, but failed. The matter came up again in the Seventieth congress which met in December.

The senate in January refused to admit Frank L. Smith and W. S. Vare, senators-elect from Illinois and Pennsylvania respectively, because of alleged political corruption in their campaigns and elections. Senator Reed of Missouri spent considerable time during the summer investigating the cases, and when the senate convened on December 5 the battle for and against the admission of the two men was resumed.

President Coolidge declared himself early in the year, in favor of adequate national defense, and congress in its army and navy appropriations was fairly liberal, going even beyond the Chief Executive's recommendations by providing for three light cruisers. In October Admiral Magruder severely criticised the management of the navy in a magazine article and paid the penalty, being removed from his command of the naval station at Philadelphia.

The Fall oil lease scandal came to the front again several times. The United States Supreme court cancelled the leases given by Fall to E. L. Doheny on the ground of fraud, and later President Coolidge turned the naval oil reserves back to the Navy department. In October the Supreme court cancelled the Teapot Dome lease held by Harry Sinclair. In that month the conspiracy case against Fall and Sinclair went to trial in Washington, but a mistrial was ordered when it was discovered some of the jurors were being shadowed by Burns detectives employed by the defense. Sinclair, W. J. Burns and several others were cited for contempt of court.

There was a reorganization of the machinery for enforcement of prohibition in May. Seymour Lowman succeeded L. C. Andrews as assistant secretary of the treasury in charge of that job, and Dr. J. M. Doran replaced Roy A. Haynes as commissioner of prohibition. The Anti-Saloon league lost its guiding hand when Wayne B. Wheeler died in September, but under other leaders it went ahead with plans to raise millions for the defeat of all wet candidates for office.

In April the President vetoed the Philippines assembly act for a plebiscite on independence for the islands. Later Governor General Wood came home to report to Mr. Coolidge at the summer White House in the Black Hills. The general was in poor health then and on August 7 he died in Boston, universally lamented. In December President Coolidge appointed Henry L. Stimson to succeed General Wood as governor general of the Philippines.

The cases of Sacco and Vanzetti, Italian Communists, stirred up their fellow Reds all over the world, and the so-called "pinks" as well. They had been convicted of murder in Massachusetts and sentenced to death. The fairness of the trial judge was attacked and the execution of the men was delayed for months by every means in the power of the defense. The Supreme court and Governor Fuller declined to interfere and the men were put to death on August 22.

The annual convention of the American Legion, which was held in Paris, was a great success and the former doughboys thoroughly enjoyed their return to the scenes that became familiar to them during the World war. After the convention adjourned most of the thousands of delegates visited the battlefields and went to Belgium and England. A large party journeyed to Rome. Edward E. Spafford of New York was elected commander of the Legion and San Antonio, Texas, was awarded the 1928 convention.

What remains of the Grand Army of the Republic held the national encampment of that organization in Grand Rapids, Mich., in September. E. D. Hawk of Sacramento, Calif., was chosen commander in chief, and Denver was elected for the encampment of 1928.

When the Seventieth congress assembled in December President Coolidge sent in a message in which he stood pat on a number of controversial topics. He again called for the creation of a federal farm board to administer a revolving fund to help cooperatives, and again urged the strictest economy. He recommended a moderate reduction in taxes on the lines favored by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, adequate works on the lower Mississippi to control floods, legislation permitting the President to act during coal mine strikes, the turning over of the government's merchant marine to private capital, and the projection of the Gulf-to-Atlantic waterway through the St. Lawrence.

The house ways and means committee did not agree with Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Mellon and submitted a bill $232,000,000. Most of the Mellon recommendations were ignored in its preparation. The house itself went even further and before the holiday recess passed a measure calling for tax reductions aggregating $290,000,000, or $65,000,000 in excess of the maximum set by the administration.

The government budget submitted to congress by the President called for appropriations totaling $3,556,957,081, and he gave his approval to the Navy department's 20-year building program requiring expenditures of $725,000,000 in the first five years.

AVIATION

Details of Charles A. Lindbergh's epochal flight, alone, from New York to Paris are still fresh in all minds. Testing his plane by flying from California to Long Island in two hops, the quiet young man took off for France on May 20, and 33 hours and 21 minutes later he landed safely at the Le Bourget field. The French people went wild over him and in France, Belgium and England, honors were heaped upon him. He kept his head wonderfully, and his modesty and devotion to his business, both in Europe and after his triumphant return home, endeared him to all Americans even more than his great achievement. Rejecting all offers that would have made him wealthy, he took a position in the Guggenheim Foundation for the advancement of aviation, and in his famous plane, the Spirit of St. Louis, made a tour of all the states.

In December Lindbergh was invited to Mexico City by President Calles and responded by making the first nonstop flight from Washington to the Mexican capital, where he was received most enthusiastically as the unofficial ambassador of good will.

In February De Pinedo of Italy flew across the south Atlantic to Brazil, later flying up to the United States and Canada and thence to the Azores and home. The army's pan-American air squadron lost two of its members in a collision at Buenos Aires; the rest of them returned to Washington in May. C. D. Chamberlin and C. A. Levine flew from Long Island to Germany in June, establishing a nonstop distance record of 3,905 miles. The same month Lieuts. J. L. Maitland and Albert Hegenberger of the army, flew from San Francisco to Honolulu, and Commander Byrd and his crew hopped off at New York for Europe, landing in the sea near Havre, France. E. L. Smith and E. B. Bronte made the flight from San Francisco to Hawaii in July, landing on Molokai island, out of gas.

Many planes were entered in a race from California to Honolulu in August, and four started, but only two made the trip successfully. One of these was manned by Art Goebel and Lieut. William Davis, and the other by Martin Jensen and Paul Schlueter. The other two starters, carrying four men and one woman, were lost, and Capt. W. P. Erwin and A. H. Bichwaldt, who flew in search of them, also perished in the ocean. Before the start of the race three entrants were killed in accidents. Yet another bold aviator who disappeared, was Paul Redfern, who undertook to fly from Brunswick, Ga., to Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Then, in September, Pilots Bertaud and Hill, with P. Payne, a New York newspaper man as passenger, undertook the transatlantic flight, heading for Rome; they fell into the sea and perished. In October Ruth Elder and George Haldeman tried to duplicate Lindbergh's feat but were forced down near the Azores and picked up by a steamer. Pilots Schlee and Brock started from New Foundland August 27 for a flying tour of the world. They landed in England the next day, and continued their trip successfully as far as Tokyo, Japan. By that time the conditions over the Pacific were such that they wisely made the crossing by steamship. Pilots Tully and Medcalf of Canada lost their lives in trying to fly from Harbor Grace, N. F., to London in September.

European aviators were almost as active as those of America, and some of them also paid the extreme penalty for their boldness. Captains Charles Nungesser and Francois Coli, famous French aces, undertook a nonstop flight from Paris to New York in May, and were lost off New Foundland. In August Capt. Leslie Hamilton and Col. P. F. Minchin, with Princess Lowenstein-Wertheim as passenger, started from Upaven, England, for Ottawa, Ont., and were never seen again.

SPORTS

In respect of attendance all records in American sporting events were broken in 1927. The outstanding events in this way were the prize fight for the heavyweight championship in Chicago, between Gene Tunney and Jack Dempsey on September 22; and the foot ball game, also in Chicago, between Notre Dame and the University of Lower California on November 26. The fight, it is needless to say, was won on points by Tunney, the champion. The foot ball game resulted in a victory for Notre Dame. In the squared circle during the year Pete Latzo lost the welterweight title to Joe Dundee; Bud Taylor retained the bantamweight championship by defeating Tony Canzoneri; Mickey Walker, world's middleweight champion, of New Jersey, beat Tommy Milligan, European champion, in London, and Sammy Mandell kept his lightweight title by whipping McGraw.

There was an interesting race in the National Baseball league, which was won by Pittsburgh. The American league pennant was taken by the New York Yankees, and that club defeated the Pirates handily in the world's series. Ban B. Johnson retired from the presidency of the American league in October and was succeeded by E. S. Barnard of Cleveland.

EVENTS OF 1927 IN MANY LANDS

Bobby Jones maintained his place as leader in the world of golf, for he not only won again the British open championship, but also the southern open and the national amateur titles. However, he lost the national open, which was won by Tommy Armour after a tie with Harry Cooper. Bobby Cruickshank won the North and South open, Johnny Farrel the Metropolitan open and eastern open, Bob Stein of Seattle the western amateur, Mrs. Harry Pressler the women's western, Tommy Armour the Canadian open and the professional, Mrs. Miriam Horn the women's national, and George Duncan the French open.

France's tennis team captured the Davis cup from the Americans, and one of its members, Lacoste, again won the American championship, defeating Bill Tilden. However, Tilden, Hunter and Misses Wills and Ryan made a fine showing in European tournaments.

It was difficult to pick the best of the year's college foot ball teams, for several were undefeated. Yale beat Harvard in their annual match, and University of Illinois won the Western conference championship. The Army-Navy game in New York resulted in victory for West Point.

Horse racing had a prosperous year and a number of new tracks were opened; two of these were in the Chicago region, for Illinois' legislature had legalized pari-mutuel betting. The Kentucky Derby was won by H. P. Whitney's Whiskery, and the American Derby at Chicago went to Hydromel. Handy Mandy captured the Latonia Derby.

DISASTERS

It was another year of disasters and convulsions of nature. Earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, furious storms and devasting floods were numerous and took a terrible toll in lives and property destroyed. The Mississippi valley floods that started in April were the worst in the history of the United States. Vast areas from central Illinois to the Gulf of Mexico were inundated, hundreds of persons drowned and hundreds of thousands rendered homeless, while the property losses ran into the hundred millions. All relief agencies, from the government departments down, were employed, with Secretary Hoover in general charge, and the people of the country contributed most liberally for their unfortunate fellow citizens. An immediate result was the formulating of plans for flood control for action by the Seventieth congress.

Of other disasters the worst were: In January: Seventy-seven children killed in movie theatre fire in Montreal. In February: Earthquake and snowslides killed hundreds in Yugo-Slavia; forma los in southern states and along the Atlantic seaboard, fatal to sixty-six. In March: Sixty-nine killed in two mine explosions in England and Wales; nearly 2500 perished in Japanese earthquake and tidal wave; tornado in Arkansas, 33 dead. In April: Mine explosion in West Virginia, killed 94. In May: About 200 died in storms in Middle West; earthquake in China ruined Liangchow and other cities and killed about 100,000 persons. In July: Flood in China killed 1000 and in Saxony 200; earthquake in Palestine took 268 lives. In September: Storms and tidal waves ravaged west coast of Mexico and parts of China and Japan; tornado in St. Louis, Mo., killed 89 and did $75,000,000 damage to property. In October: Italian steamship sank off Brazil coast, 314 lives being lost. In November: Disastrous and fatal floods in New England and Alegria; explosion of gas storage tank in Pittsburgh killed about 40 persons. In December there were furious gales on the Great Lakes that destroyed much shipping and cost some lives. In an orphanage fire in Quebec about sixty children and one nun perished.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

OPTIMISM

Several years ago one of the biggest bankers in the world paid out some of his money for the purpose of establishing a little cheerfulness and confidence in the minds of those poor souls who have looked so long on the black side of business life that they have forgotten that there is any other viewpoint.

The banker began his advertisement with this sentence: "There is so much in the present situation to inspire confidence and hope for the future that there seems to be ample justification for some optimism."

Optimism is nothing more than a wise combination of cheerfulness and confidence.

We may have one without the other and still be incomplete. With both we are assured of individual happiness and we are likely to be liberal contributors to the joy of the world at large.

A good many people frown on the building of air castles. They think it a useless and wasteful occupation.

Any man or woman with an imagination will indulge in that delightful pastime, and a man or woman without an imagination is poorly equipped for this life's problems and struggles.

The best thing ever said about air castles came from Thoreau, who contributed to the joy of the world by his confidence and cheerfulness.

"If you have built castles in the air," he said, "your work need not be lost; that is where they should be. Now put foundations under them."

Could you think of a better plan for life than that; to have the highest aspirations and to seek to make them facts; to foster splendid imaginings and bring them to realities.

One of the reasons that Diogenes never found an honest man was because, living in a tub, he sat on the ground.

The real things of life are the higher-up things.

Leave the ground to the earthworms and the moths, to those that creep and crawl.

Find for yourself a place on the heights where the air is clearer, the sunshine is brighter, the view is broader and the world is better.

Too many of us go through our little existence here looking through a slit. We seek so little when there is so much to view.

If you have never built an air castle become the architect of one today. Build it high and big and glorious. Adorn it with your fondest desires and then, as Thoreau told you, put foundations under it.

Herbert E. Hutchinson, director of music at West High School, has announced his intention of employing a new method of grading pupils taking music next term.

He will use the modified contract system. Each pupil will grade himself according to the amount of work accomplished during the semester.

There will be no failures among those attending classes regularly. The next grade, G, will be earned by those who can carry their own vocal part, and keep time.

E's will be awarded only to those who can write the notes, signifying in addition, their letter-names, syllable names, and time signatures.

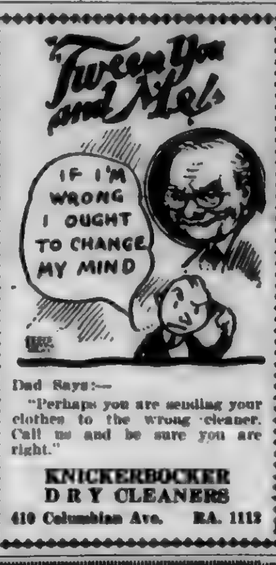
Where the Fault Lies



"Some of you tell me you don't like books, and I'm not surprised, for many of you admit that you never open a book unless you are told to do so," said a high school teacher to his class. "How many of you would have any human friendships if you never tried to cultivate the acquaintanceship of the folks about you? The man who goes off into a corner, who never looks or speaks to anybody, does not make friends very quickly. If you don't like books, try the experiment of getting acquainted with them."

Books are like people. They embody thoughts and ideas. What they have to bring us cannot always be ascertained from a casual glance at the covers of a transient excursion across a few pages. Many of them at first acquaintanceship seem dull and uninteresting, but they will reward us with revelations of wit or wisdom or philosophy far beyond our highest expectations.

Quaint Bertha and Full Skirt For the Youthful Party Frock

Life in the midwinter social whirl is just one party dress after another. What to choose next is the ever recurring question. Had you thought of an evening ensemble all in pure white? Meaning by ensemble, frock, wrap, footwear and corsage flowers all in lovely white. Not only is there something individual and extremely effective about pure white as it mingles in the throng of gaily, colorfully attired fashionables, but all white is an outstanding caprice of the mode this season.

Evening apparel highlights white in two distinctly contrasting trends, one is the very youthful bouffant type, the other, a more sophisticated classic draped style. Each emphasizes simplicity, at least simplicity in effect, although it be arrived at by way of utmost sophistication.

White crepe satin draped to distinction, with little or no trimming save perhaps a bit of sparkling embroidery, is a favorite theme of the classic mode. Even the costume flowers are white, preferably snowy gardenias used in graceful clusters, although palest pink florals are sometimes preferred. Often the slippers worn with gowns of this character are of white satin, if they be not of silver.

With this choicely simple costume milady wears a slim ermine cape, such as is proving outstanding among fashionable evening wraps this winter. Capes of white velvet are also good-looking either with shirred collar or collared with white fox or ermine.

For the very young girl, bouffant types are most alluring. Many are styled of white tulle with a slim little semi-fitting bodice of satin, the skirt flounced all the way, with garlands of flowers here and there, or that which carries out the all-white idea to a finish—a monture of white violets or gardenias at the waistline.

Whenever the mode launches a new vogue, rest assured of its exploitation by the Hollywood colony of screen folks. Which accounts for the fact that pretty Barbara Kent has selected for her next party dress the quaint all-white model which she is wearing in this picture. It is of white satin, made with a tight bodice and a bertha. There are ruffles of lace everywhere—and those are white satin flowers on her bosom—just "like a picture," she looks. Note the fluffy white feather vanity case and pocketbook combined, which she carries. It seems these feather evening bags are the latest whim, and young girls adore them.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

KISSING THE PART

"Come to mother, dear; she'll kiss it and make it better." Isn't this the regular thing when a child sustains an injury, real or imagined? And many a grownup child, married to another grownup child, turns to him a wry face with a half-pained, half-playful indication of a squeezed thumb or a stubbed toe! And he kisses it and makes it better.

Little do they realize, those indulgent mothers and husbands, than in this mock ministration they are but imitating the practice of old-time sorcerers who pretended to cure diseases by sucking the affected part. In their superstitious, mythtenanted age they found the people easy prey to their impositions, but today even the baby is skeptical of the curative powers of a kiss on a bruised knee.

They burned witches in old New England; what shall we do with the "pretenderes" today?

The report of the shooting of a pintailed duck in California gives evidence of the age to which some birds attain. In 1914 this duck was cured of duck sickness by a doctor, and a United States Biological Survey label was attached to its leg. For 13 years the duck eluded hunters and survived the poisonous alkali areas where many ducks dies each season.

SOCIAL SEASON ON AT STATE

Josephine and Joe Use Wise Tactics in Securing and Placing Dance Bids.

"Back home and broke" may be the state of affairs for some students after the return from the holiday season but not for Joe and Josephine College after they have spent some ten days at Ohio State.

The fact of the matter is that Josephine has loaned her new pearl necklace to Joe and with the new coon skin coat he received from Christmas, Joe has applied for a loan at the sign of the three balls and has been successful in raising an amount that will tide them over until the next check from home arrives. And so now they feel that their collegiate good times are well on the road to recovery.

Winter formal sorority and fraternity dances are the social attractions at the time and the fellow that rates the big dances or the girl that has a bid to the big swings are the ones that might be said to belong to the campus "400" for the winter season. And again their luck may change when spring comes. The bidding might well recall to the stock broker the way he figures out the best investments of the week. So goes it with the co-ed who figures her bid and places it according to the place it will bring a return bid to a frat formal.

Disregarding the fact that the winter quarter at Ohio State is the shortest of the year and at the same time the hardest it is the time when activities are at their highest. Among those dances listed for the winter season are the Junior Prom, Military Prom, Y. M., Y. W., Mixer, Interfraternity Council, Dames' Club dance and innumerable fraternity and sorority hops.

Basketball at State hasn't held much interest for Joe and Josephine during the past weeks. All loss and no wins makes any game dull they say. But nevertheless any game provides the opportunity for a date and where the interest is lost one way it is gained in another. The fellow that possesses a season ticket and finds a co-ed who likewise has the prized ducats enjoys the winter season of this indoor sport.

Fraternity initiations will begin about the middle of next week. This much looked forward to time has been in the minds of the elegible pledges for the past quarter and realizing the possibilities of long hikes or man hole fishing in the winter winds they are beginning to become a little shaky.

Joe and his sister had double dates one day last week and spent a very enjoyable afternoon at the museum. Costing nothing and affording an opportunity for many collegiate puns the event proved to be one that might well be tried by all students at State. The museum holds many curiosities and a wide field of valuable knowledge.

Campus dramatics are in the spotlight this quarter too. Scarlet Mask will present "Beau Kaye" at the Hartman on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week. Feminine make ups will hold the stage center and co-eds will marvel at the abilities of their opposites at cosmetic slinging.

HERE AND THERE
By C. C. M.

From the "25 Years Ago" column of the Citizen we notice this pertaining to the Hilltop: "On Jan. 13, 1903, W. E. Potts was installed as president of the Hilltop Improvement association." Twenty-five years is a rather long period of time but we notice this to be true of both periods—Hilltop people are always interested in improvements.

• • • •

Another week has passed and the high spots in the world's news continues to center around murders, executions, Lindbergh, congress and the Democrats. A man and a woman have been electrocuted in New York for the murder of the woman's husband. Another case similar to that of Hickman has come up before Michigan police. Lindbergh continues to spread American good will and has flown to South America. Congress is faced with the coming elections and the fact that a merchant marine is rusting in the Hudson river. The Democrats have paid tribute to Jackson, Will Rogers has given them his definition of the two houses and they have decided to hold their big clash this year in Houston. This is the week's news.

• • • •

But what of those things mentioned do I care for, you ask. Well, we answer, if you aren't interested in these spectacular events, then turn to the comic page.

• • • •

We have heard of sad tales but the saddest of the time is that of the person who asked "If the train cut my cow's tail off, would the butcher retailer?"

• • • •

Prof. Tittle sez: "The younger generation isn't so bad. The only difference in the young people of today and those of my time is that we used language that was a little more romantic. We called it 'spooning' and today it is called 'necking.'"

• • • •

We notice the picture of a Chinese princess who will come to this country in the near future for the purpose of visiting our radio stations. She wears a veil from which small ornaments are hanging down around her face. Evidently she wishes to set a new style in this antenna evening radio garb.

• • • •

Editorially speaking we feel that but few of the eds of State may be classed among those who are buying cosmetics for their own personal use. True there may be much ground for improvement in this particular field of beauty but why use student money for paints when the winter winds will affect the necessary school girl complexion.

• • • •

Everything and everybody seems to be migrating south at this time. The Coolidges have boarded a train for Key West and then to Cuba. Lindbergh is farther south into South America and even the Democrats have decided the south is the place for their 1928 convention. And all the average man has to look forward to is that when winter passes spring will follow.

• • • •

One reason the Dems may have picked the Lone Star state is that there will be less possibility of the braying of the donkey disturbing the peace of the nation. More power to the donk as he crosses the wide wastes of the Texas sand lands.

• • • •

Just when the stories of the bad lands were passing out a bunch of politicians seek to restore the name by gathering their congregation there.

MEDICAL ADVICE

"Hey, Doc!" called Gap Johnson of Rumps Ridge, addressing Doctor Slash, who was rushing past in his car. "My boy, Banty, has got something the matter with him. He is aching all the time, and can't stand, set or lay down. I wish you'd stop and sorter look at him!"

"Can't now, Gap!" responded the physician. "I'm sent for to see a gent that has been shot all to pieces by his brother-in-law. Tell Banty to climb a tree and hang on till I come back. Hi-on, Flivver!"—Kansas City Times.

MIXED

There is a class of men that gets along fairly well for years by making an impression upon the impressionable, whose sole stock in trade is noise. They do not last forever, but some of them last an astonishingly long time. Like toy balloons, these wind-inflated beings make a gaudy appearance for a while, but in time collapse. When the balloon comes down, a child somewhere is made unhappy, but when the public career of an inflated man ends suddenly nobody but himself is even aware of it.—Muncie Evening Post.

WORK ON NEW VIADUCT TO BEGIN SOON

To Eliminate Crossing at Camp Chase in Spring; Estimated to Cost $320,000

Work on the new viaduct in West Broad street at Camp Chase is scheduled to be started in the spring by the State Highway department.

This will eliminate the danger that has been present since the building of this road. During the past years this spot has been a dreaded place for passing motorists. A year ago this month a Big Four flyer hit a bus of the Columbus-Dayton line and killed two Columbus people and injured five others.

The cost of the viaduct will be taken care of by the Big Four R. R., the city and the state. The former will pay one-half the cost and the latter 25 per cent each. The estimated cost of the structure is $320,000.

The roadway will pass under the railroad according to the proposed plans. A 60-foot roadway will take care of autos, street cars and pedestrians. The same diagonal line of travel will be followed. There will be a center row of supporting piers. The roadway will be 10 feet wider than the present road.

This viaduct is one of those in the State Highway department's crossing elimination program that is to start in the spring. The state is co-operating in financing this estimated cost.

WEST-SOUTH BASKET BALL

Cowboys Take Short End of 36 to 18 Score in Friday Night's Tilt on South Floor.

In a most unusual game, South defeated West 36-18, Friday, Jan. 20, at South High.

It seemed as if the Cowboys could not put them in during the first half. They missed enough under-the-basket shots to have won by a fair margin.

In the second half, weakness featured West's playing. They just seemed to fold up like the proverbial tent. Many shots were misdirected and everything seemed to go against them.

Wood and Walker scored seven points and Trahue four, all of West's.

In other games of the High School Basket Ball league, North trounced Aquinas 24-11, and Central downed East 25-19.

Mr. Everett Monce of Harrisburg, paid a Sunday visit to J. C. Cooper and family of 2028 Floral Ave.

COUNCIL APPROVES LIBRARIES

Four Branch Libraries Get Appropriation of $30,000; One to Be Located on West Side.

A step toward raising the general culture standards of Columbus and proving to the educated classes of the east that the people of this city are not totally illiterate was taken on Friday night in city council meeting when that body approved an appropriation of $40,000 for the purpose of establishing four branch libraries in the city.

But at the regular meeting of the council on Monday night they found it necessary to cut $10,000 from the sum, to be used in other departments. This leaves $30,000 for the use of the branch libraries.

This amount will be divided up into equal sums for use in four sections of the city. These branch libraries will be located on the West Side, Linden, one for the east and one for the south side. Proposed plans will provide from 1500 to 2000 books for each library. Two branches will be open on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays and the other two on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

This movement started in city council four years ago when W. L. Millikin introduced a resolution to provide branch libraries for the city. The Columbus Federation of Women's clubs recently took up the matter again and deserve much credit for the conclusion brought about in council on Friday night.

In addition to the action provided for in the new branches there will be an adequate supply of reference books on various subjects. Books not in stock at the time called for may be transferred from the main library or one of the branches on the next day. According to recent statistics, the city of Columbus appropriates 22 cents per capita of population for library purposes. Cleveland on the other hand provides $31.47 per capita for their library. This new appropriation will help to place Columbus in the class of other cities of the size. Before this action was taken the library fund was one of the lowest in the country.

A committee composed of Dr. G. F. Barber, Dr. Howard Whitehead and Wyatt Millikin represented the Hilltop at the council meeting on Friday night.

COL. GEORGE W. GOETHALS

The death of Col. George W. Goethals, at his home in New York last Saturday, brings to mind the achievements of this great engineer in the building of a seemingly impossible project—the construction of the Panama Canal, which was opened in 1914.

This feat was accomplished after seven years of hard labor, shearing away of mountains, building of great locks and creating a great lake above sea level. The building of this great waterway connected the Atlantic and Pacific oceans and shortened the water route from New York to San Francisco 7873 nautical miles and between New Orleans and San Francisco 8983 nautical miles.

Col. Goethals was born in New York and received his early education there and in the City College of New York, following which he was appointed to the United States Military Academy at West Point, where he was graduated in 1880 as a second lieutenant in the engineering corps. After his graduation he was appointed instructor of astronomy and civil engineering at West Point and later was sent to Cincinnati in charge of the army engineers in charge of improvement of the Ohio river for navigation. He was chief of corps engineers during the Spanish-American war and was later placed in charge of the Muscles Shoal canal construction in the Tennessee river.

BOYS ARE GRATEFUL

Boys do not always know how to express their gratitude gracefully, and they are sometimes so awkward that they do not show the gratitude they really feel; but every boy does appreciate whatever kindness and consideration may be shown to him. A woman in Connecticut always returned the balls which fell into her yard over the high-school-yard fence, and the boys involved felt her kindness so deeply that they put their money together and bought her a big box of candy. A woman who would do that would know enough about boys to be sure of their gratitude, whether it was shown outwardly or not; but for their sake as well as her own she was no doubt delighted with the boys' fine deed.

JOE COLLEGE IS INITIATED

"Hell Week" at O. S. U. Proves Big Event in Life of Fraternity Members.

Somewhere back in the dark ages of colleges, the fraternity and sorority originated, and not long after followed the first so-called "Hell Week" which has to this day continued and become even stronger in many instances. Last week was "Hell Week" at Ohio State university.

Joe College, being one of the second year men, is now a full-fledged fraternity man after the trials and tribulations he passed through from Wednesday to Saturday midnight in the process of being initiated into a fraternity. As for Josephine, she will be initiated by her sorority actives this week.

Joe appeared at the house on Wednesday evening with the required dozen wood paddles made to given specifications so as to fit the brother's hands. As he put a foot upon the property of the fraternity he became from that time on until midnight Saturday one of the lowest beings on earth. He assumed the position of a dog and was no longer permitted to utter English. No longer was he permitted to wear the flashy new clothes that Christmas vacation had rendered him. Instead they were being worn by the active members.

When Joe added his dirty dozen wood wallopers to those already assembled for the big slaughter the room changed to appear more like a lumber yard.

There is no peace for those who are the scums of the earth while being initiated. Any action of a so-called dog is susceptible to punishment and so after having counted some two hundred whacks of the paddle Joe lost count on the first night. So far as the roughness goes the first night is usually the hardest and from then on more in the line of entertainment was furnished by the dogs.

Solo singing that will never appeal to even the jass opera lover and concerted operas that the world will forever lose comprise the musical program. But long will those who were fortunate enough to hear it remember the yodeling harmony that came down from the house tops at midnight to the words of "I'm a little birdie—Coo Coo."

Fishing from manholes and jig dancing in hotel lobbies are not uncommon. But Joe, after having fished for two solid hours in a manhole at Broad and High and catching only a few suckers was given the task of returning to the house the next morning with twenty different brands of cigarette stubs, a pocket full of wheat, and a plump live chicken. Others of the dogs were required to bring in certain inscriptions from the monuments of Green Lawn cemetery. Others brought in a bushel basket of light bulbs, brass gongs, signatures of the mayor, governor and fire chief.

Traditions are present in every fraternity. For instance custom has it that all in-going members of one group must eat the meat of a cat they have caught the night before. Another favors a mess of raw liver flavored with raw onions and other bitter salves. Lime and mineral waters are favorites for drinking purposes during this time, too.

And there is no difference in the doggy nature when meal time arrives. Joe was made to walk in dog fashion and bark for his food. A meal of mashed potatoes and gravy, applesauce and custard pie are to be relished by most dogs but not so much by the fraternity dog who is given no forks, knives or spoons with which to eat. And any particles dropped from their dishes onto the floor must likewise be licked up in dog fashion.

Joe was successful in getting two hours of sleep during the period of three days and nights. Then the formal initiation services were called for Sunday afternoon. And then when the big day rolled around the whole atmosphere changed and the doggish actions were thrown out and the boys welcomed into the brotherhood and fraternal spirit of the group that overshadowed all the disagreeable acts of the initiation period.

Even the smile of the fellow who wielded the most wicked paddle of the session was enough to forgive him for everything he had done.

And now Joe College is an active member of the fraternity and looks forward to the next initiation when he, too, may handle the traditional paddle.

HERE AND THERE
By C. C. H.

Punishment by death is one of the important things facing the governing body of the state of New York. The execution of Gray and Snyder may be the last in that state if proposed plans go through. Here we see a return of life sentences in preference to capital punishment. This would indicate that capital punishment is a failure.

JOHN SPEAKS FOR HIMSELF

"May I present my son, John Alden Woodward, Miss Trevor? John Alden, this is Constance Trevor of whom I have told you. I am sure you are going to be very good friends."

The elegant Mrs. Woodward smiled complacently upon the young couple before her. Her son, tall and handsome in white flannels; the girl boyishly slender in her riding habit, the little tri-cornered hat fitting snugly over her tawny hair.

Constance Trevor extended her hand. "John Alden Woodward," she repeated and then added mischievously, "Any kin to the John Alden who stole the love of Priscilla away from dear old Miles Standish?"

John Alden Woodward scowled darkly.

"Indeed he is," said Mrs. Woodward hastily and a little proudly. "He is named for the very same John Alden. My ancestors came over in the Mayflower. . . ."

A group of young people came down the veranda and carried Constance off for the afternoon ride. John Alden dropped into a chair facing his mother.

"For the love of Mike, can't you forget that Mayflower stuff, mother? I've been fed on it—brought up on it and I tell you, I'm sick of it! Ever since you came down to school in my freshman year and spilled the beans about your illustrious relatives, the fellows have panned me right. Forget it! What good is it anyway?"

"I should think you would be glad to claim such ancestors, my son. Surely a young man with your education must realize what it means to have forbears such as yours. I would like to blazon the fact from the housetops that my courageous forefathers sailed across the ocean in the search of freedom of worship—I am disappointed, John Alden." Then she changed the subject. "Isn't Constance charming?"

"Didn't notice her—much," he replied, moodily. "I might have if you hadn't made that crack about my name. John Alden was all right—so was all the rest of the crowd maybe, but they lived their lives—let me live mine. Is she going to stay here with her uncle all summer?"

Their genial host, Judge Benjamin Cardiff, joined them. He was giving this house party over the week-end in honor of his niece who had come from the South to spend the summer with him.

"Well, John Alden, all through with the rah-rah stuff and ready to enter the scrap with the world, eh? Law isn't a bad game, either, and I'm qualified to speak after thirty-nine years of it. Hear you are going in with Carter Drummond. You are fortunate. Carter has established a remarkable practice and it is a splendid opportunity for you. He is coming down on the 4:32. Connie asked him when we met him in town yesterday. It will be a pleasure to entertain the partners of the new law firm of Drummond & Woodward."

"If you have not already sent your car I would like to run down to the station and meet him, judge," said John Alden. "Haven't a thing to do. Got here too late to get in on the ride."

Halfway to the station he met the riders returning home. Connie and Billy Harwood were in the lead and she waved her riding crop to him. By Jove, she was attractive—his mother had written about her. Mother was ambitious all right, rather raw the way he had jumped on her about the ancestor stuff, but a fellow gets tired of that bunk—Constance Trevor—darn pretty name—pretty girl, too—how the deuce had old Carter Drummond, handsome, debonair, man-about-town—not a day under forty—the old fossil, ever got in so strong with her—darn nice-looking girl—rolled her r's—

The next time he saw her she was in a daffodil-yellow frock and Carter Drummond, his law partner, was leaning over her. She was laughing up at him. John Alden turned away and tried to be pleasant to little Poppy Langborne. Then Judge Cardiff touched him on the arm.

"Would it be agreeable for you to take Connie in to dinner, John A.?"

Unfortunately Carter Drummond was at her left and monopolized her unpardonably until John Alden made a desperate resolve.

"I say, Miss Trevor, don't you think you might show me a little attention? Let old Carter there talk to his partner—you talk to me."

Constance Trevor turned to him, laughing.

"Well, you do inherit some of the courage of your Puritan Ancestors after all, John Alden. I just thought I didn't exist—for you. You haven't said a nice thing to me since you met me, as Mr. Drummond does."

"Bunk! I mean that ancestor stuff. Forget it! I'm not for it, honest! And you look just like a daffodil in the springtime. How many dances do I get?"

"We-ll," she drawled, "I think we can manage three—and, of course, there will be some cut-ins. And—honest—I promise—never, never, never to mention the breaking waves and the rock-bound coast and the dear old Miles Standish to you again, unless—for some very good reason."

"The Big Parade" and "Loves of Carmen"
BEST HILLTOP SHOW FEATURES NEXT WEEK

What can be more appealing to the show going crowd than a picture of college life enlivened by a football game, college fellows and "the" girl? That's just what the picture that runs at the Rivoli today and tomorrow is the best example of.

With Dolores Costello and William Collier, Jr., this picture of present day college life gives all the humor and action of George Ade's best novel. This picture is being presented for the benefit of the Highland Avenue Parent-Teacher association.

Western on Saturday

"Shootin' Irons" is the name of the Saturday picture at the Rivoli. It is a real western love and shooting story with Jack Luden carrying the central role with his real firearms. Luden is a new star but those who see him in his first big picture will agree that he has come to stay in the western roles.

Lon Chaney's Best

If you were asked what Lon Chaney's best picture was you would probably name one you have recently seen. But until you have seen Lon's latest, "The Unknown," you will not be correct in your statement. On Sunday and Monday this greatest of Chaney pictures comes to the Rivoli.

You can readily feature Lon Chaney in the role of Alonzo the Armless, wherein he feeds himself, throws knives and does all sorts of things with his feet. And too there is Joan Crawford in the part of Estrellita, the gypsy girl in the circus troupe. The unknown is wanted throughout Europe for various murders and crimes but even the latest act of this killer fails to reveal his identity when the finger prints cannot be matched. Detectives overlook the fact that an armless man might have finger prints.

Frenchy!

If you care for the Frenchy atmosphere and real romance with a beautiful lady in a story of love in the days of Louis XV you will like "Madame Pompadour" with Dorothy Gish at the Rivoli on Tuesday.

"The Big Parade"

Everyone has heard of this best of all war dramas, "The Big Parade," but all have not seen it and everyone will be glad to see it again. It presents the reality of the war and shows the real life of the doughboy abroad. And the tinge of love and hardships that are shown are no more than real.

And then there is Karl Dane as one of the buddies so you know the picture must be complete. With the songs of "Parley Vous" and "Your in the Army Now" and the attempts at making love in a foreign language makes the picture great.

"The Red Mill"

One of America's most loved stars comes to the Ritz today in "The Red Mill." We have reference to Marion Davies.

This is a story of a neglected little girl in Holland and of how she found her lover through patience. The beautiful settings of this Dutch novel make it different from most pictures.

Serial at Ritz

On Friday a new serial, "Dangerous Adventures," featuring Grace Darmond starts a fifteen week run at the Ritz.

The feature for the day is "Alias the Deacon," with Jean Hersholt and Ralph Graves.

Saturday's feature is a real western, "The Red Raiders," with Ken Maynard and Anna Drew.

"Loves of Carmen"

This much talked about picture comes to the Ritz on Sunday and Monday. Dolores Del Rio plays the lead in this Spanish picture with its foreign back ground.

Mystery and Classic

A wonderful picture and one that is truly different is "The Phantom of the Opera," at the Ritz on Wednesday and Thursday.

Lon Chaney, of course—and if its a makeup you are interested in you will shiver when you see the Phantom with his mask off.

There is nothing cheap about this picture. It is a classic and one to be remembered.

Mary Philbin, as an opera singer, has won all Europe through her concerts. She is suddenly swept from the public and carried to the underground home of the Phantom. And as this mysterious man in black with face hid by a mask, moves across the stage—Well that is telling too much.

The Fellow Who's Satisfied
By EVELYN GAGE BROWNE

Look out for the fellow whos satisfied
And who thinks he knows it all;
He has missed his chances and never tried,
So he's due for a good hard fall.

He believes there's nothing more to know,
That he's quite as smart as they make—
In fact he thinks he's the whole show
And most other folks a fake.

But while he was patting himself on the back,
This poor, self-satisfied guy;
He got switched off on a one-way track
While the chances passed him by.

You've got to be up and doing today,
With your eyes on the goal ahead,
And you've got to be quick or the chance gets away,
And the other chap has it instead.

You can't sit around in this age of ours
When there's such a lot to do,
And every one of life's wasted hours
Means just that much loss for you.

You must have still higher things in view,
And know there's a lot to learn,
That there's always something better to do
And a chance at every turn.

And the man who knows that he doesn't know,
Is more than half on the way
TO KNOW, and make his knowledge grow
More vital with every day.

So don't be content till you've done your best,
And never be satisfied
Until you've met the hardest test,
And have tried, and tried, and TRIED!

And THEN don't be satisfied, My Friend;
For there're greater things to do
Than were ever done—and there's just no end
To the chances in store for YOU!

Why BIG CAR OWNERS turn to ESSEX

The wide and swift penetration of Essex into the market of big car ownership is brilliant tribute to its quality from men and women accustomed to finest motoring luxury.

There is no transition in comfort, performance or versatility when the nimbler uses of the Essex give it the call over their larger cars.

Accustomed to great performance and appearance—they have them in Essex. Accustomed to roominess, riding ease, smoothness and finished action—they have these qualities, full measure, in Essex.

And this great range, combining beauty, handiness and convenience in size with big car qualities, makes it the outstanding choice of those who require but one car.

Its all-new advantages, added to traditional Essex value, give it even wider preference than its predecessor which outsold all other "Sixes" at or near the price, almost two to one.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

WHAT WILL YOU LEAVE?

What will you leave when you die?

That is not an inquiry into your financial condition. The inventory of the little pile of dollars, or the big pile, as the case may be, will be of only passing interest. A matter of a few taxes and some regrets that you had not been more saving.

The dollars that you leave will soon be scattered and probably not at all as you would have spent them and if you could send a message from where you hope you are going you would probably pay few compliments to those who will be distributing what you col[illegible].

What are you going to leave besides money?

Are you going to leave a pleasant memory?

Are those who stay here for a little while after you are gone going to speak kindly of you?

Are they going to recite good deeds that you did and kind words that you spoke?

Are they going to say: "I miss Jim because he always said 'Good morning' as if he hoped it would be a good morning for everybody?"

Or are they going to say: "Well, we're rid of the champion grouch of the world. Hope he finds something to suit him in the next place."

Are you going to leave anything accomplished that is worth while?

Have you done something or are you doing something that will benefit and help others after you have started on your last journey?

There must be a great satisfaction to a man dying if he can say, as did President John Quincy Adams: "This is the last of earth! I am content."

No man should be content unless there shall remain behind him something worth while. What he leaves is an index of how he lived.

One of the most important gifts mentioned in the Bible is a cup of cold water.

One of the world's great acts of charity was the giving of the widow's mite.

If Dives had had a little of the spirit of love and charity in his soul he would not have been so distressed when he saw Lazarus in glory.

Have you ever offered a cup of cold water to one who needed? Then you have the promise that you "shall in no wise lose your reward." And a part of that reward will be that long after you have forgotten the act it will be remembered by another.

Have you been charitable, as the widow was charitable and in the same proportion? Then be sure you are leaving something behind you more substantial than a monument.

Life is only made up of accomplishments. If it ends without our having done anything except for ourselves we have lived uselessly and unprofitably.

The man who leaves only wealth behind him has done no better than the insect that leaves his store of food. Both will shortly disappear and cease to be even a memory.

The only real storehouse, the only real place to leave a memorial of yourself is in the hearts and minds of your fellow men.

Then, there is neither rust nor moth nor decay. Leave wisdom if you can. Leave example. Leave a memory of right achievement and honest endeavor. Leave something worth while to those who follow you and creditable to yourself.

No man can die too poor to do that.

Smart Snug-Fitting Kid Boots Protect Dainty Silken Ankles

To own a pair of red-top boots, once the ambition of the small boy, now the heart's desire of the modern woman—a change wrought by time. Seeing that it is the fashion for the gentler sex to wear them, the query arises as to just what is meant by the term boots. Well, the dictionary tells us it is a general term for footwear "extending above the ankle." Which be exactly the purpose of the new and fashionable boots—the "idea" back of modern boots for feminine feet being to protect dainty silken ankles from the cold blast of winter and at the same time maintain an appearance of chic and charm.

The handsome kid boots in the picture, which by the way are as soft and fine as a kid glove, do this very thing. They protect, while they stress the "feminine touch," creating of the utilitarian boot "a thing of beauty and a joy"—as long as wintery winds do blow.

Best of all, these new boots are adjustable. The way to work them is this—when the mercury in the thermometer goes down, boot tops go up and vice versa. Like clouds with silver linings, there is a lovely colorful lingling to the tongue and the supple top of these boots. The picture shows how to wear 'em "inside out" on fair days, disclosing a gay color, perhaps bright red if your taste runs like to that of the proverbial small boy, or pure white if preferred, or maybe beige or very likely a delicate pink kidskin to blend with silken hosiery. The boot it self maybe of black, brown, tan or navy kidskin, according to preference.

Fur-topped cavalier boots are also one of the smart items in cold-weather footwear. They are made in trim slenderizing lines with high heels and terminate in a wide cuff of fur above the ankle. A strap and a buckle snugly adjust the fur band at the top.

Of a sturdier type are smart Russian boots made in either patent leather or in brown calf. The former are trimmed with a band of black-and-white calfskin, the latter with brown-and-white fur.

GOOD THINGS WE LIKE

Those who enjoy the sweet potato will like this method of serving it:

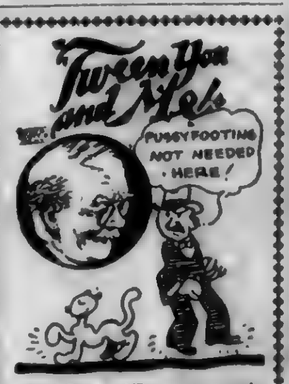
Stuffed Sweet Potatoes.

Peel and parboil the potatoes of even size and shape, core with an apple corer and fill each cavity with prunes which have been softened and stoned. Close the ends with halves of the cores, thus keeping in the juices. Bake on a grate with a pan to catch the drippings. In the pan place two cupfuls each of sugar and water and allow the syrup to remain while the potatoes are cooking. Remove the potatoes to a hot dish and boil down the syrup until it forms a thread. Pour this over the potatoes and serve with rich game, goose or broiled mackerel.

Boiled Ham.

No Virginia ham is considered fit for cooking until it has been cured at least a year. Wash and scrub the surface well, place in a kettle with cold water, and bring slowly to the boiling point, then let it simmer for half of the required time for cooking. One-half hour to the pound is considered the best time for cooking ham. After half the time is passed remove and pour on fresh boiling water and finish cooking. Take from the water, trim and skin it while warm. Cover with cloves and brown sugar and baste with cider while cooking in a hot oven, until well browned on the outside.

Chestnut Stuffing.



This is one of the most tasty of stuffings. Take a pound of lean, uncooked ham cut into dice, cover with cold water and simmer until tender. Meanwhile slit a quart of large chestnuts, peel them and boil till soft in salted water. Press them through a sieve, add one-fourth cupful of butter, a teaspoonful of onion juice, a pint of bread crusts, a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, with salt and pepper to taste, adding a bit of marjoram and paprika.

The chopped giblets, cooked and chopped, are added to this stuffing if desired, making a most finely flavored stuffing.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"ARGUS-EYED"

The person who is always on the watch, whom nothing escapes, is said to be "Argus-eyed." The implication is usually that one is of a suspicious nature, and this element is quite in keeping with the origin of the expression.

The term comes to us from the parlance of mythology. Argus being the creature of a hundred eyes who never went to sleep with more than two at a time. He is familiar chiefly as the tool of the goddess Juno, who was always suspicious of her husband, Jupiter, and who used Argus to watch him.

It was his zealousness in watching Io, Jupiter's mistress, whom the god, surprised by his wife, had turned into a heifer, that at last brought Argus to grief. Jupiter, troubled at the distress of Io, who in the guise of a heifer, had been given by Juno into the custody of Juno, enlisted Mercury to put Argus out of the way.

Leaping from the heavenly towers to earth, Mercury, disguised as a shepherd driving his flock, charmed Argus with the music of his Pandean pipes. In vain, however, did he try to lull the watchful eyes to sleep, until finally, with a supreme effort, he related to Argus the story of how the pipe upon which he played was invented. The fantastic story, accompanied by a plaintive melody from the instrument, at last caused the hundred eyes to close at once, and as Argus nodded forward for a moment, Mercury cut off his head!

SCHOOL LUNCH FACTS

By EVANGELINE HARRINGTON of West High School

II—FRANCE

The school feeding movement began in France in 1849, when the national guard in the sword district of Paris presented toward the city, a balance in their treasury, with which they requested that a schooling be furnished to school children. One of the first uses of this money was to furnish a warm dinner at noon to the poorest children of the district. This was the beginning of a school fund which is now used in maintaining the school lunch rooms in France. However, the movement has not become so general, nor is it as well developed in this country as in Germany and in England.

Donald's Inheritance

By MRS. E. O. CARLSTON | Author of "Donald's Deception" and "For Freedom."

CHAPTER I

Mr. John T. Burton, Attorney at Law, stood before a small group of people in the library of the home of the late Samuel T. Clinton. In his hand, the lawyer held a legal document, which was the last will and testament of the deceased man.

Seated beside the table next to the attorney was a young man of perhaps twenty-two years of age. His features, which had always worn an expression of extreme boyishness, now appeared more mature in appearance. His handsome gray eyes were sad and troubled.

Opposite him at the other end of the long table, James Clinton, stirred restlessly in his chair. The remainder of the group consisted of other relatives of Mr. Clinton, whose names had been mentioned in his will.

After reading the preliminary paragraphs of the document he held in his hand, the attorney went on in his clear, business like voice:

"To my son, Donald, I bequeath one hundred thousand dollars, which will be given to him only after he complies with the following conditions:—It is my request that he marry Miss Audrey Gordon, the daughter of my old friend, George C. Gordon."

"To my foster-son, James Clinton, I bequeath ten thousand dollars. In the event of failure by my son Donald to comply with the above conditions, within the first year after my death, he shall thereby forfeit his share of my estate, in which case half of the amount mentioned shall be given to my foster-son, James, the remainder to be donated to charity."

Mr. Burton completed the reading of the document, and as his presence was no longer required, he quickly took his departure.

While his father's will was being read, Donald Clinton did not move a muscle, his gray eyes remained expressionless, but his mind was more alert than outward appearances indicated.

"It is my request that he marry Miss Audrey Gordon." The words pained and surprised him. Who was Audrey Gordon? Why had his father made such a request? Why had the matter never been mentioned to him verbally by his parents? He glanced slyly through the corner of his eye in the direction of James Clinton. Had his foster-brother influenced Mr. Clinton to make these conditional terms which would be highly beneficial to the older boy if Donald should fail to fulfill his obligations? But the countenance of James Clinton betrayed nothing.

Donald knew that Mr. Clinton had had great confidence in the older boy's business ability. Was it not possible that the old gentleman, whose mind had not been so keen in his declining years, had accepted his adopted son's advice in the matter of making his will, as well as in the purchase of stocks and bonds?

Several days after the terms of Samuel Clinton's will had been made known to those concerned, Donald decided to call at the office of John T. Burton, to see if the attorney could give him any information as to why he had been requested to marry Audrey Gordon. Donald entered the elevator in the Concord Building, and ascended to the twelfth story of the building. He soon found the number for which he was searching, and saw the name "John T. Burton, Attorney at Law," printed on the glass of the door. He stepped into the main office, and as the room was empty, he seated himself in one of the chairs which Mr. Burton had provided for his clients, and began to read the daily paper.

Before many minutes, the door of the attorney's private office opened, and Mr. Burton's secretray, a rather plain featured, but neatly dressed young woman, emerged from her employer's office, carrying in her hands a notebook, some pencils, and a variety of correspondence. Donald arose to his feet when she entered the room.

"Is Mr. Burton in?" he inquired.

"Yes, but he is very busy just now. You may speak to him in a few moments."

Donald sat down again, and resumed his perusal of the Daily News. After an elapse of twenty minutes, the door to Mr. Burton's office opened again, and to Donald's surprise, the attorney, preceded by James Clinton, entered the waiting room.

There was nothing in the manner of James Clinton, which would indicate that his interview with the lawyer had been for anything but honorable purposes, and Donald, although he had had a few suspicions regarding the ambitions of the older boy to control the greater portion of Mr. Clinton's fortune, now dismissed these conjectures from his mind; and being easily won over by anyone who spoke pleasantly to him, Donald began to form the opinion that he had been too quick to jump at conclusions.

After his brother left the attorney's office, Mr. Burton motioned Donald to a chair beside the large mahogany desk in his private office, and seated himself in the swivel chair which he turned to a position where he could gaze through the window, which, being at a high altitude, commanded an excellent view of the city. He slowly lit a cigar and waited a little impatiently for the younger man to speak.

"I called to confer with you regarding the terms of my father's will," Donald explained briefly. "Mr. Burton, do you know why he made it conditional?"

Mr. Burton, with his eyes steadily fixed on a distant church steeple and not on the face of the person with whom he was speaking, replied:

"My dear boy, I haven't the least idea why he made such an odd request. As a friend to him and to you, I did all within my power, in fact, I said more than I should have said to dissuade him from his intentions, but he had evidently fully determined to make the stipulation that you marry Miss—er—ah, I seem to forget the name of the lady in question," the lawyer said.

"Gordon," Donald reminded him. "Audrey Gordon."

"Ah, yes. That is correct," Mr. Burton agreed.

"But who is the girl; where does she live? Donald questioned. I can not find her name in the city directory."

"I understand that she is now living in the old Stedman home, which is about two miles the other side of the city limits on the Clarksburg pike."

"Are you familiar with the financial circumstances of the Gordon family?" Donald asked.

"They have met with finacial embarrassment, I understand," the attorney explained. "But a friend of the family has informed me that Mr. Gordon is rapidly retrieving his losses."

"I wonder if Mr. Gordon, anxious about the future welfare of his daughter, could have induced my father to make the odd request that I marry Audrey Gordon."

"It is possible, but of course, I could not be certain about the matter, as your father did not take me into his confidence regarding his motive for making the request contained in his will."

"I suppose that I will have to locate the young lady, and if possible, marry her in order to legally inherit what belongs to me by right of birth," Donald said, half to the lawyer, half to himself.

"Tough luck, my boy," the older man remarked.

The object of the interview with his father's legal adviser having been attained, Donald was soon out of the building, walking aimlessly through the streets, pondering over the unusual situation which he was compelled to face.

CHAPTER II

James Clinton was alone in the luxurious suite of rooms which he occupied in the Clinton home. For several minutes he stood beside the window overlooking the broad avenue in front of the house. It was a dreary evening, the pavements being covered with a glare of ice. The cold, driving wind and a fast falling sleet and rain further contributed toward the making of a typical winter night.

"Devilish weather, but I've got to go," James Clinton remarked, turning away from the window and walking toward the telephone on the opposite side of the room. He took the instrument in his hand, and removed the receiver from the book.

"County A-46 please, he told the operator.

After waiting a few seconds, a sweet, cheery voice answered:

Hello."

"Hello, Audrey. I'm coming over. It's a bad night, but I just must see you, dear."

"All right, Jimmie. I'm terribly lonely. You know father is in New York, and auntie isn't feeling well, and retired an hour ago."

"Be there in a jiffy. 'Bye."

"Jimmie" placed the 'phone on the table, then rang the bell for a servant, who immediately answered the summons.

"Tell Harry to have the car waiting for me in twenty minutes," he commanded. "And by twenty minutes, I don't mean an hour."

"Very good, sir," the man replied.

Obedient to orders, the chauffeur of the Clinton household drew the large car up before the entrance to the mansion. In a few moments, the front door opened, and James Clinton hastened down the steps. As he failed to tell the man at the steering wheel where he wished to go, Harry asked:

"Where to, sir?"

"First to No. 598 Hawthorne street. Then to the Gordon residence on the Clarksburg pike."

As driving was difficult, the chauffeur handled the car cautiously and avoided a fast rate of speed.

"For heaven's sake, Harry, speed up. This isn't a funeral procession. If the cop nabs you for speeding, I'll pay the bill."

"But sir, it is not safe to drive so fast tonight. It is hard to watch traffic through all this rain and sleet. Besides, the streets are very slippery."

"Who owns this car, you or me?" asked James, too angry to notice his English. "Speed up, I say."

"All right, but Heaven help us."

The car shot forward as the chauffeur increased its speed. Presently they turned into a rather narrow thoroughfare known as Hawthorne street and while climbing a grade, the chauffeur attempted to pass a long line of machines, and being unable to see distinctly, blinded by the rain and the glare of bright headlights, did not notice the car that turned into Hawthorne street from a side street, which was coming swiftly toward the Clinton machine. Before the car could be guided into the line of traffic on the right side of the street, the cars collided. There was a loud crash.

James Clinton, at first frightened because of the danger threatening himself, regained his composure and insolent manner when he escaped without personal injury.

"Hurt, Harry?" he asked. "If not, drive on. We can't stay here all night."

"But, sir, the other car has turned over. Someone may have been injured. I think we should investigate."

"Oh, drive on, I don't see a policeman in sight. If somebody gets our number, I'll pay up."

"If someone has been killed, I'm afraid money wouldn't help you very much."

"I've never been in a scrape yet, when a handful of bills didn't set me right. Step on your starter."

"But, sir, I've got a conscience. If you want to dismiss me, it's O. K. with me, but I'm going to see what damage has been done."

With that the broad shouldered man who had for years piloted the car belonging to the Clintons opened the door of the sedan and stepped onto the icy pavement. James could see that the only advisable thing to do was to follow the example of the chauffeur, so he reluctantly made his way through the crowd toward the overturned car, which had been hurled to the opposite side of the street by the force of the collision.

It was soon discovered that the wrecked car had only contained two persons—a young woman; a middle aged man, who was supposed by the crowd of spectators, to be her father. When James reached the wrecked car, he saw that both victims were being carried to a nearby house. Being in a hurry to get away from the scene, James drew Harry aside.

"Here is a check for $500.00," he said. "I must hurry to fill my appointments."

Then James made his way to the nearest telephone, and called a taxi. Before many minutes had elapsed, a red and black taxicab drew up to the curb. James instructed the driver to drive to No. 598 Hawthorne street. As it was only a short distance from the scene of the accident, James was soon seeking admittance to a room on the second floor of an apartment house.

The door was opened to him by a gaudily dressed woman, who was about the same age as himself, and whose character and reputation were rather questionable in that neighborhood.

"Good evenin' Jim," she said, rather thickly, as he entered the room. "Glad you came. Was gettin' lonesome." Here she threw her arms around his neck in a bold, familiar fashion. But he disengaged himself from her embrace.

"None of that stuff tonight, Stella. I've got an important engagement this evening, and I can't go there with traces of lipstick all over my complexion."

The woman he had thus addressed looked at him doubtfully.

"You are calling on Audrey Gordon tonight?" she asked, a jealous tone in her voice.

"I don't think it is necessary to explain that to you," James said irritably, as he was not in a very good humor because of the accident. In fact, anything, no matter how small or trivial, that interfered with James Clinton's plans usually had a bad effect upon his disposition.

"Jim," she said. "Don't you love me any more?"

"Yes, yes, of course," he replied. "But you wouldn't have much affection for me if my pockets were empty. For that reason, I intend to keep the appointment I mentioned to you."

"There are other ways of getting it without marrying an heiress," the woman said. "Bill and the rest of our gang don't get theirs that way. When Bill is flush with cash, I read the next newspaper that comes out to see who has been robbed lately."

"But I will not resort to those methods, I tell you, Stella. After all, I have a certain amount of pride, and prefer to be considered legally honest."

"But are you going to marry Audrey Gordon?"

"Maybe so, maybe no," James replied, not caring to give her much information about his affairs.

"All right, run along," Stella said. "Give Audrey my love," she added sarcastically.

"I'll be sure to," James answered in the same tone. Then he bade her goodbye, and hastened toward the taxicab waiting for him in front of the tenement, and was soon nearing the Gordon home, where a beautiful young girl, who would have presented a marked contrast, both in character and appearance, if compared with the person who had that same evening received a call from James Clinton.

"How much farther is it, sir?" the taxi driver questioned.

"About a mile, I think. When we reach the house, I will let you know."

They soon came within sight of a large dwelling, surrounded by beautiful snow covered grounds.

"This is the place," James informed the driver. He was admitted to the house by a maid, who conducted him to the large family living room, which presented a cheerful aspect, with the bright fire glowing in the hearth, and a very pretty young lady seated beside it, so thoroughly absorbed in the book she was reading that she had not yet observed the worthy Mr. James Clinton's presence in the room. He stepped quietly across the soft velvety carpet and placed his hands over her eyes.

"Guess who it is," he said in a tone so gentle, that none of his acquaintances who knew him better would ever have recognized.

"Now, Jimmie, who could it be but you?" the girl said, removing his hand from her face, and rising to her feet. "I thought you would never come."

"I was detained by an accident. That chauffeur of mine drives too fast. I'll have to give him a good calling down," James said, and proceeded to give her a rather biased account of the events of the evening, omitting, of course, his visit to the apartment of Stella Snyder.

"Glad you weren't hurt, Jimmie," the girl said.

"Are you, really? I am too, because I couldn't bear to think of disappointing you when you were expecting me."

"Let's see what we can hear over the radio tonight," Audrey suggested, to avoid the possibility of their conversation becoming personal.

"Do you prefer classical or popular music?" she asked him.

"To be frank with you, Audrey, I do not care for either this evening. I want to have a little talk with you while we are alone; as I may not have the opportunity again soon, with your aunt continually watching every move we make.

"Don't blame auntie, Jimmie. She is just a little old fashioned, you know."

"Yes, that is quite evident." James replied as he seated himself beside the girl.

"Do you know how very much I love you?" he asked in a tone as sincere as he could make it.

"Probably just a wee bit, if any."

"It's more than a 'wee bit' darling. I'm not good at pretty speeches, but isn't it enough when I say that I love you and want you to be all my own?"

His arm slipped around her, but she drew away.

"Don't do that; not yet. I—I'm not real sure."

"Have I failed to make myself agreeable to you?" the would-be love-maker asked.

"It isn't that," she replied. "But still, as I said, I am not sure of my mind. You know I am very young, only eighteen, and have not met many men so far, as society bores me with their artificial pretenses of friendship."

"That is why I love you so much. Everything you do is so entirely without affectation. I always know that you are sincere."

"Then please believe that I am sincere when I say that I am not yet able to analyze my feelings for you," Audrey said.

"Promise me this, then, that you will not allow anyone else to come into your life until you have decided whether or not you care for me."

"Are you afraid of suffering from the comparison?" Audrey asked, being of a disposition that usually impelled her to speak her thoughts in plain terms. James winced, but replied evenly:

"No, I can't say that I am afraid. But I hope you decide in my favor, as your refusal would make me desperate."

Audrey skillfully guided the conversation to safer topics, and before many minutes passed, James heard the Clinton car stop in front of the house. After a few more words to Audrey, he donned his over-coat and hat and was soon riding toward the city.

CHAPTER III

Audrey retired to her room immediately after James Clinton had gone home. For hours, she lay awake thinking of the words the young man had said to her. Of course, she felt pleased, as he had always tried hard to be agreeable while in her presence; and she believed him to be all that any young woman could desire. Still, she could not decide what her answer to him would be the next time he should speak to her about the subject.

The following morning, Miss Alma Gordon, Audrey's maiden aunt, now being in her forties, who had watched over and taken care of the girl since the death of Mrs. Gordon about ten years previous to this time, said to her niece:

"I thought I heard James Clinton's voice downstairs, last night after I had retired."

"You did, auntie. He called me on the 'phone first, and I was so lonesome I permitted him to come over."

"I imagine you think I am just a fussy old maid, but I don't feel as though that boy is to be trusted very far."

"But why not, auntie?" Audrey asked. "So far as I have been able to notice, he has been a perfect gentleman."

"Yes, so far as you have been able to notice; but I've had more experience with that sex than you have. That is why I am enjoying single blessedness. Of course, I do not tell that to everybody. But about James Clinton: he has a very sinister expression in his eyes that is more noticeable when he thinks no one is observing him."

Audrey said nothing, but in her mind, she decided that her aunt's opinions were somewhat warped, due, probably, to some unfortunate love affair; and she resolved not to take the older woman's advice too seriously. For days, she was swayed with doubts and fears regarding James Clinton's professed love for her. For hours, she would think about this important subject, and her meditations usually ended with the assurance that the young man was sincere in his attentions, and that her aunt's opinions were perceptibly wrong.

James Clinton could not have had a better ally than Miss Alma Gordon. As is usually the case, all that is said opposing a certain love affair serves only to strengthen the affection of the person concerned. Every time James Clinton called, this lady of well meant intentions became so bitter in her estimation of him that her manner was positively rude.

Audrey knew that the moment the door closed on James, her aunt would begin in the usual way:

"Audrey, I tell you, that young man is up to mischief. Do not trust him." After which, the young lady who received the advice, would make her exit from the family living room quickly, as every day found her less inclined to listen to anything that was said against James Clinton. The man, himself, noticed Audrey's increasing regard for him, and secretly exulted to know how well his plans had succeeded.

"Now, let Donald try to get her," he thought triumphantly. "The old governor's will did not make provision for the possibility of her refusing to marry him."

CHAPTER IV

The winter months flew by, and spring arrived. Still, Donald Clinton had never made any attempt to become acquainted with Audrey Gordon. Having been given one year in which to become the husband of the girl who had been his father's choice, he conjured to postpone the visit that he intended to make sometime during the allotted time. This, of course, was just what James Clinton desired, as he had more time to win Audrey's affection without meeting with opposition. One evening in early May, Audrey's aunt, who had that afternoon gone to call on a sick friend, 'phoned her niece, saying that she would not be home until the following afternoon, as her services would be needed during the night in the sick room. The same evening, James Clinton called, and was admitted by Audrey, herself, who was expecting him.

BIRDS' TRAVELING TIME

"It is about time we were starting, isn't it?" asked the Wild Geese of their leader, and the leader said: "Yes, it is time we should be starting. We are the first travelers to take the journey up further north. It is still the winter time—but we start when it is not yet spring, but then, spring expects to be along before many, many weeks pass."

So the geese started off on their journey.

"Even though their is ice in our marshy home we will not mind it," said the geese. And as they flew along, they said: "No, we will not mind it. We want to head the traveling procession.

"Chirp, chirp," said little Mr. Robin "It is time for me to go North.

"I like to be an early arrival, too. Perhaps some of my family will not come until later.

"But I want to go soon now. There is one person who greets me with absolute delight and joy when I appear.

"'Oh, there is the first robin,' she says, 'how glad I am to see him. It seems like spring at last.'

"And it is a pleasure to hear her say that."

Then the purple grackles began to travel, and the bluebirds said it was high time for them to be leaving.

And the other birds began to follow, traveling for their spring and summer homes.

They went, carrying with them no trunks and no food and not suitcases!

But their little wings were strong and their small bodies full of bravery.

The ravens and eagles and owls were already starting in housekeeping and attending to their domestic duties when the hawks began their journey.

The hawks traveled by day, for they were not afraid. The red-tailed hawks flew higher than the others, and the duck hawks were on the lookout for prey as they traveled. They would even attack the plovers.

The bobolinks flew by night and from all over the birds started on their journey, which would keep them away during the spring and summer months.

Always the birds had leaders who showed the way for the others to follow.

There were some young birds who had never been on a journey of any distance before, and they bravely followed along, although it all seemed quite new and strange.

So the Geese Started Off on Their Journey.

"Come along, come along," said the leader bird, "this is the way to come.

"Do not get away from me. Stay close. Follow right behind."

And the birds did as their leader said.

As a great flock of the robins were flying along, Leader Robin sang this song:

We follow the call of spring, spring, spring,
And some of it with us we, too, will bring,
As we go up north where it has been so cold,
And even now we're being quite bold
To go so early in the season.
Some birds think it's entirely out of reason,
But we want to go early and see what's up,
And upon the very first worm we robins will sup.
Oh, we call the call of spring, spring, spring,
Which with it soft rains will bring, bring, bring.
We'll be so happy, we'll be so gay.
Oh the spring, the spring we'll follow alway!

"Yes," Leader Robin added, we've become quite poetical, and we're going to sing this song with many variations and beautiful touches for the little person known as Dolly who loves us and whom we love.

"We're going to see her now. Come, birds, let us hurry, hurry, hurr!"

And the birds needed no further urging, for this flock was going to the place where Dolly lived and their little robin hearts were glad.

John Alden Woodward was a frequent guest at Judge Cardiff's home that summer. He danced, swam, rode, motored and golfed with Connie Trevor, but it always seemed that his partner, managed to make a threesome of whatever they planned, and Connie generously divided her time between them. Then on a Saturday morning in the fall Drummond came into John's office.

"Will you do me a good turn, old man? I am going to be tied up with the Widow Morganthau all afternoon and have asked Connie for dinner and the theatre. I won't have time to go over and get her and was wondering if you wouldn't do it for me. Connie will surely understand. Thanks, old man. By the way, you might plan on being best man in a few months."

John Alden looked up at his partner. "What?"

"Best man—best m-a-n. I'm dueced-ly tired of living around at the clubs, and all that. Want a home. Never thought much about getting married until I met Connie."

John Alden sat slumped down behind the wheel of his car, hardly noticing the gorgeous autumnal landscape as he drove to Judge Cardiff's home. What an ass he had been, to be sure—thought all the time that Connie had liked him—had been butting in on her and Carter. Jove, that was a blow—Carter and Connie—his partner and the girl he loved.

Constance was curled up in her uncle's favorite chair before the fireplace reading. John threw off his overcoat and stood gazing at her.

"Oh," she drawled. "I thought it was Carter. Where do you suppose he is?"

"In the city," snapped John Alden. "I am his emissary, sent to take you to the city, that he may dine with you, make love to you, propose to you. I apologize for being such a fool this summer, Miss Trevor, I—I didn't know that I was—a third party."

Constance unwound herself and brought both heels down to the floor with a resounding whack. "Oh-h-h!" she said slowly. "How very interesting. So Carter sent you for me, that he might dine with me, make love to me? Are you very sure that he didn't ask you to prpose for him, John?"

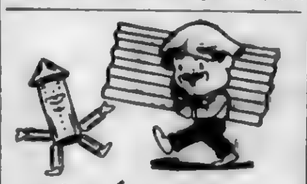
"Fortunately—not."

Constance stood up and took both lapels of his coat in her hands. John looked straight over the top of her red-gold hair at the mantel, over which a huge painting of Judge Benjamin Cardiff smiled benignly down upon them.

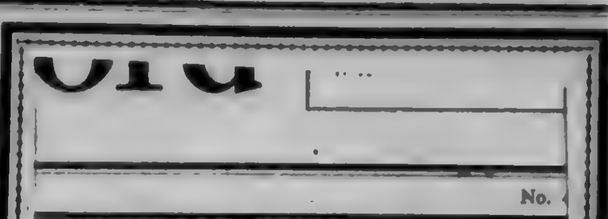
"Jack," she sair softly, "do you remember the story of the courtship of Miles Standish?"

"Lord, yes! What of it?"

"Then—then—why don't you speak for yourself, John Alden?" she whispered and a second later her face was buried close against his tweed shoulder. "I—I take it back," she laughed. "I didn't mean to call you that. I meant—why don't you ask me to marry you, John, I'm ready. Are you?"



"Trade Your Smiles."



The radio is a help in spreading the gospel in Japan. Recently two leading men of Matsuzaka came to the principal of the Girls' School saying that they had heard some Christian lectures by radio from Nagoya, and wanted the principal to invite the lecturer to come to Matsuzaka. They said many young men really wished to know more about religion, that there was much dissatisfaction with Buddhism, and that they would be glad to hear more of Christianity. The invitation was sent, and one more door is open in Matsuzaka.

Scout Anniversary Week of Feb. 6-12

Eighteenth Anniversary of Boy Scout Movement to Be Celebrated Over U. S. Feb. 8.

Child Hit By Car Is Much Improved

John Spencer Gains Consciousness on Sunday After Accident on Thursday.

John Spencer, 13, of 124 S. Oakley Ave., who was struck by an automobile last Thursday rallied a little on Sunday morning and had regained consciousness by Sunday afternoon. On Monday morning he was able to drink and eat a little and doctors pronounced his condition as much improved.

LIBRARY BOARD MAKES PLANS

Committee to Confer With City Library Committee; May Lose Holmes Library.

A meeting of the board of trustees of the Holmes Hilltop Library was held at the library on Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. A committee of three, consisting of Rev. H. C. Hutchison, Rev. A. C. Baughman and Mrs. C. T. Woodruff was appointed to confer with the city library board in regards to the new branch library to be located on the west side.

The feeling at the meeting on Tuesday was that the establishment of a city branch library on the Hilltop would do away with the present Holmes Hilltop Library.

According to the terms on which the Holmes Hilltop Library was established, the books are to remain on the Hilltop. The establishment of the city branch here might cause the present books to be returned to the donor. But it is thought that the books of the Holmes Hilltop Library could be used in the city branch is they were not allowed to be transferred to any other library.

Further action toward the establishment of the branch library will be taken when the new committee reports on its meeting with the city library board.

Humorist at F. & S. Banquet

State Harmonica Champion Also Entertains in Delightful Manner.

One hundred and eighty fathers and sons enjoyed the annual Father and Son banquet at Hillcrest Baptist church Tuesday evening, sponsored by the Men's Bible class. On the program were many entertaining talks, addresses, specialty numbers and music.

The address of welcome to the fathers and sons was given by N. W. Kent in behalf of the class. Response to this address was given by Dr. R. J. Miller.

One of the big surprises for the evening was given by Hugh Fuller, nationally known humorist of Delaware, who entertained his audience for forty-five minutes in a most delightful manner. In fact some who have heard him on other occasions declare his entertainment of Tuesday was better than any time they had heard him previously.

Not satisfied with having one high-class entertainment on the program, the committee brought forth Earl B. Zeayer, state harmonica champion and winner of the Dispatch Gold medal, who besides providing excellent music on the mouth organ, demonstrated to his audience what could really be done on this instrument in the way of imitations. He was accompanied by Hugh Robertson on the piano. These two artists operate over radio station WCAH each Saturday night.

Following this entertainment a short talk was given by the pastor, Rev. J. H. Hughes.

Music for the banquet was furnished by the Hilltop School of Music.

During the spring and fall months it is the plan of the men of this Bible class to provide entertainment of this nature once a month.

Log Cabins Then; It's Storerooms Now

Some people think because they were born in log cabins that they should have been president. And because they were educated in the old log school house they believe they are in a class with Lincoln. But even some Hilltop children today are among those who can say they have had a part of their schooling in a school building that is different, for this age.

Over one hundred first and second graders are involved in the new "store room school" being operated in connection with John Burroughs school. To be exact there are 107 pupils attending the three-room school at the corner of Harris and Sullivant avenues.

Exclusive, you might call them. Or better, they are in a school of their own. No more of the crowded half-day sessions for these tots. No more hearts broken when the dismissal bell rings and some are made to stay behind to finish the day's work.

Everything is moving smoothly at the new school, says Miss L. V. Burns, teacher of 2A and 2B students. She says both teachers and children are happy in the little three-room building. She also stated that the system is a great improvement over the two shift sessions formerly held at the main school.

These rooms are well heated, have plenty of fresh air and are always clean. They have small blackboards installed in each room and expect to have curtains put up before a very long time. Each room has new tables that are even better than those at John Burroughs. A partition near the rear of the rooms affords a cloak room.

During the cold weather the students have been allowed to play inside, but during the warmer days they play on the sidewalks in front of the building. This is probably the only noticeable handicap at the storeroom school house.

Teachers at the school are Miss L. Wahl, Miss L. V. Burns and Miss Alma Boyd.

The board of education rented these three rooms before the Christmas holidays and they were used at the beginning of the year. Some schools have portable buildings which they use during times of crowded conditions but few have tried this system of renting store rooms. This feature may prove to be a success in other parts of the city.

LINDBERGH VS. BOOKS

Among the columns of the daily newspapers are to be found more than crime and money complications or even the workings of our law making bodies. And one of these things of interest to the general public is what other people have to say about certain matters.

But a man must be known to the world before his opinion is of any weight. Will Rogers has a reputation from coast to coast and even internationally and his statements of humor in the daily pages of news have much sense in addition to the humor element. But oftimes even Will Rogers makes a joke of the things that need to be commented on in another fashion.

We feel that such was the case last week when he said that if Lindbergh had read any of the books he had picked up he would begin to have doubts as to his condition. And he evidently takes the stand that Lindbergh is a much better person for not having read books.

It is possible that the books Will has reference to are those that are flooding the market today which expound the ideas of Mercury magazine, the Babbits and Elmer Gantry. True, Lindbergh's judgment in such a case must be good.

But in the book world as in every other angle of life a person may get either the best or the worst or the mediocre if he so desires. Lindbergh surely is not the man we know as America's hero if he has not read at sometime in his life. Every person is given some power of imagination at birth it is assumed but it must be developed and one of the largest factors in this development is "book learnin" and by this term we don't mean school books altogether.

Fiction and novels of the better class have had their part in the rapid development of this nation. More and better libraries will continue to aid the cause.

MEAGER AMBITIONS

"To succeed in keeping out of the poorhouse, or in keeping out of jail, seems to me a meager ambition," said a man who has won success. To be able to say that you have kept out of jail or out of the poorhouse is about as high praise as that which an old woman accorded a young man in the community. "He doesn't chew, smoke, or drink," she said, but she could point to no positive virtues which he possessed and no achievement to his credit.

A man will never win anything worth while by merely aiming at the minimum requirements. He needs to have the highest possible goals before him constantly. There may be some distinction in escaping jail, but if that is the sum total of our attainment, we fail miserably.—Forward.

An enormous airplane that may be equipped to carry a hundred passengers is now being planned by Professor Junkers, of Germany, who has designed planes used on a number of the longer air routes abroad. "The new plane is to be an immense flying wing, four hundred feet in length, with cabins and whole suites contained within the wing." A plane with room for sixty passengers has already been produced by the Dornier factory in Germany. A series of floating islands at five-hundred-mile intervals across the ocean would decrease the risk in transatlantic flying and would make it possible for planes to carry less fuel and to have more space for freight.

A Faceless Man!

A man without a face! That's Lon Chaney in "The Phantom of the Opera" which was shown at the Ritz theatre last night and will be shown again tonight.

Here is a short outline of the story: Scene shifters and opera singers alike have complained of a terrible figure known as the Opera Ghost which is seen from time to time in the Paris Opera house. A man is found hanging to the rafters of the scenes on the night of the triumph of an unknown opera singer. This new opera star claims to be under the influence of a being she calls the "Angel of Music." She has never seen him but has heard his voice.

Then one night the new star is to give her place to the former singer of the lead in "Faust" but the management of the theatre is warned by a mysterious note that a disaster will befall but they pay no heed. That night the large crystal chandelier falls from the ceiling, killing hundreds. The ghost proves to be Erik, a master criminal of the orient. He longs to be loved and kidnaps Christine, the new opera star. He takes her to his subterranean home. She is treated decently but he warns her to never remove his mask. He is a master of music and a music lover and one day while at his piano the temptation of Christine proves to be too much. When this point is reached the faceless man is revealed. But of course there is a hero and he comes in at this time.

Fight Pictures at Ritz

Last week the state removed the ban on showing of the Dempsey-Tunney fight pictures and they made their first public appearance in this city last week. The same pictures were shown last night at the Ritz and will be shown there again tonight. The pictures show all stages of the big fight.

John Barrymore

America's screen lover comes to the Ritz on Sunday and Monday in "When a Man Loves." This picture has caused a big success as one of the truly dramatic pictures of the season. Dolores Costello has the other lead of the story. The scenes are laid in Paris during the time of Louis XV. Gorgeous costumes and courtly scenes make it a beautiful picture in every respect.

"The Big Parade"

There are two more days in which to see "The Big Parade" which is at the Rivoli today and tomorrow. Renee Adoree is of true French blood and takes the part of the French girl of the war-wrecked country in true style. It is the story of three buddies and their experiences in the shell holes of France. This picture is said to be John Gilbert's greatest.

The battle of Belleau Wood is reproduced in "The Big Parade" in such a vivid way that the audience will experience a thrill equal to being present amid the falling shells.

"Casey at the Bat"

Casey likes a swat in everything and he has it in everything from his beer and his home runs to his love making in the picture "Casey at the Bat" which is shown at the Rivoli on Saturday. Wallace Beery takes the part of Casey and never fails to hit while at bat except at the time when the hardest game is dependent on him. This time he fans out but finds himself "safe at home" when he encounters Camille. It's a picture of the big leagues twenty-five years ago.

Novarro in "Lovers"

An invisible villain! That's the whole thing of "Lovers" being shown at the Rivoli on Sunday and Monday. In addition we have a story of Spanish life, dueling and love making. It is a modern picture of the scandals of society in which Ramon Novarro and Alice Terry are involved. In addition to the villain being invisible the story brings to the screen the well-dressed villain in his paths in society.

Pola Negri

The world is full of a number of things—and that's what makes life so interesting and when one considers the screen world the same applies here. There are so many different types of characters that it is impossible that everyone cannot be satisfied some of the time. And one of the characters of the silver sheet that is different from the general run of actresses is Pola Negri who appears at the Rivoli in "The Woman on Trial" on Tuesday and Wednesday. The picture itself is different, too. Those who have seen "Barbed Wire" will be anxious to see this star shine again in this new picture.

HERE AND THERE

By C. C. H.

Conventions! Columbus the convention city! It's every city's dream and it seemed to have come true here during the past week. Preachers, clothiers, newspapers and lawyers were our guests. In summing the whole week up we would say the hotels have had a good week, the restaurants were more crowded than usual, there was lots of news for the papers and the taxi companies and railroad people are happy, too, that there are such things as conventions.

• • • •

Since all these groups are service rendering in their purpose we take it that the city, state or nation must be some better off for these meetings. If you do not believe it just ask the hotel keeper, taxi driver, food shoppe owner or the like. They say "Bring on the Conventions."

• • • •

Be it so there have been other things learned here during the past week. Someone probably knows what the well-dressed man will be supposed to wear this spring and someone remembers that a prominent man said all crime news should be struck from the front page of the papers. Another keeps the fact in mind that law students can't buy their way into the legal profession and church people are thinking of the pros and cons set forth in regard to companionate marriage and the part of the parent in bringing up children.

• • • •

Even if nothing definite has been accomplished it all furnishes food for thought. But the trouble is that too many people can't digest this food because they don't chew it long enough.

• • • •

Headline appearing in the Ohio State University Lantern last week: "Horse Kicks Student in Artillery Class." Here's something new in the way of anatomy.

• • • •

Capital university co-eds have listed the requirements for the men they are to marry. Among these qualities they say he must be tall, handsome, brunette, teetotaler, non-cusser, neat, sound health, clean, must have music ability, be able to dance, be a church member and have a car. Take him for all in all we have not seen his like.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman in speaking before the Ohio Pastors' convention here last week says that the young people are not at fault. The trouble lies in the older people, he states. The worm has turned. Chalk up another mark for the younger generation.

JOE MAY STUDY MARRIAGE AT U

O. S. U. Activities for Past Week Centered About Darrow, Field Trips, Collegiate Clothes.

Joe and Josephine have both asked for further details as to the possibilities of a course in marriage for the university. This has been suggested several times here of late and since the approach of the companionate marriage idea there has been a greater inquiry. It is the opinion of several members of the faculty and especially some of the university pastors that such a course would be of much value. All the advantages and disadvantages of such a step in life would be discussed in class. It hardly seems possible that any student enrolled in such a course would fall asleep in class.

A survey of the attitude toward prohibition at the university reveals the fact that the business men of the university district are well pleased with the outcome of the 18th amendment and say that even though drunkenness was somewhat increased after the act was passed it is now not so noticeable.

Clarence Darrow, noted crimanologist and better known as the Great Defender, visited the campus last Wednesday and spoke before a crowded audience at University hall. Darrow was well received and left the campus critics and even the not so serious minded co-ed thinking of what he had to say about crime. And it was comforting to many parents to know that he believes the college student doesn't make a good criminal.

Colleges over the country in the past year have restricted their speakers very closely and have even engaged a speaker and then cancelled the engagement because thy have meditated and come to the conclusion that college students are not mature enough to grasp the real good of a somewhat radical speech.

Joe College has been seriously considering signing up for a field trip with a group of Vassar college girls who will study geology in the Rocky mountains this summer. Joe isn't so interested in geology but the opportunity to be in the presence of 100 girls from a strict girl's school sounds too good to pass up.

Training horses in the Artillery department of the university R. O. T. C. isn't always what it is cracked up to be, says Joe. On Thrusday of last week one of the boys in the class came in contact with a horse's hoof and suffered the loss of a tooth and a fractured jaw. It only goes to show that one must keep his mind on his work when training artillery horses. The boy didn't know how it all happened so the conclusion is that he was at fault for not watching where the horse planted his feet.

All the folks from back home are coming into town this week to see just how they do things down at the big school. In other words it is Farmers' Week at Ohio State university. This school is one of the best rated agricultural schools in the country and this is one of the big features in promoting the cause in the state.

It is a fad in college circles and various campuses that the male members of the body do without hats during even the coldest months of winter. One of the big factors in this fashion is that the style involves no outlay of cash. The same applies to garters. But clothiers here in convention last week have said that the student that refuses to cover his cranium from now on will be turned from the smart circles of society. But what care we says Joe College for all the rules of the haberdashery. Bare heads are continuing in full force and we expect to see it so for some time yet. The price of a hat will provide a very excellent evening's entertainment.

WOULD ERECT GREAT SHAFT TO LINCOLN

A Lincoln monument towering 500 feet high, visible for 20 miles and surmounted by a powerful searchlight to mark the way for air mail pilots is suggested by Herbert Wells Fay, custodian of the Lincoln tomb and monument, as a fitting memorial for the Great Emancipator.

Such a monument would be Illinois' challenge to the charges that the immortal Lincoln was being forgotten by his native state. It would also challenge the genius of the world's greatest artists and sculptors, for Mr. Fay suggests a gigantic standing statue of Lincoln 200 feet high mounted on a pedestal 300 feet high.

Surrounding its base he would build a suitable memorial hall to match the proportions of the monument and sufficiently large to house Lincoln memorials.

Plan of Memorial

"Make three circles of rooms," suggests Mr. Fay. "On the outer wall arrange to record the principal events in Lincoln's life, especially from the cradle until he went to Washington. In frames on the walls and in show cases put pictures of every spot he ever visited, letters and speeches he wrote, things he said, stories he told friends, documents and surveys he made. A systematic arrangement of all of these would give a patriotic thrill to every visitor, American or foreign.

"In this exhibit could be shown a copy of every letter, speech, survey or document he made in chronological order. Pictures of every person mentioned and places visited could be shown. There could be shown all publications about Lincoln, authors of books, photos of the scenes and everything. Make it answer every question asked about Lincoln. Have every county of the state represented.

"In the center circle reproduce his birthplace, probably exact size, showing its surroundings. Build in miniature the contour of the country and make it show all the places he frequented in Kentucky.

"Then in the next room faithfully reproduce the Indiana home and vicinity. In adjoining rooms of the outer circle show a miniature of the Decatur home of Thomas Lincoln, the Coles county home, and reproduce the New Salem log cabin village. One room could be devoted to the Black Hawk war, showing the contour of each county traveled.

Rooms for Major Evans

"Rooms could be set aside showing Vandalia, the campaign for congress, Lincoln-Douglas debates, depict the battles of the Civil war, the assassination and funeral. Another room could be set aside to the Lincoln memorials erected in his honor.

"The inner circle of rooms next to the base of the statue could be devoted to a display of paintings of Lincoln, scenes of his life depicted in sculpture and photographs. To get such a collection offer $10,000 each for the five best paintings of Lincoln or pertainings to his life and $5000 for the next five best. Offer smaller sums for miniatures of Lincoln, transparencies, scenes or photographs.

"This amount of money would enlist the best efforts of the greatest artists of the country and such a collection, properly housed, would attract every Lincoln lover of the world. This would make the tomb of Lincoln the last word in detail. One of the most expensive and desirable acquisitions would be a boulevard connecting the state capitol, the tomb and the Lincoln home. With this idea followed out, criticisms that Illinois does not appreciate her Lincoln advantage would forever be silenced."

Tomb a World Shrine

Mr. Fay, who, as custodian of the Lincoln monument, is recognized as one of the best authorities on Lincoln, asserts that there is a growing sentiment that Illinois does not fully appreciate her great historical asset.

"The home and tomb of Lincoln attract more attention over the world than any other single feature, probably more than all put together," said Mr. Fay.

"If the citizens of Illinois were alive to their historical advantage they would appropriate a couple of million dollars to show their appreciation of what came to them by the working of fate. Nearly $3,000,000 was expended on the memorial at Washington and it answers every hope of those who are satisfied with an appeal to the spectacular. It awes the guest and gives friend and foe the proper thrill. Something different should be planned for Springfield.

Push Idea Before State

Mr. Fay suggests the monument with the surrounding memorial hall simply as a means of getting his idea before the public, believing that the time is ripe for Illinois to begin giving constructive thought to the matter. The present tomb and monument were erected in 1874 at a cost of $350,000. It is in urgent need of repairs now. Visitors comment on its condition. The small rooms in the base of the monument are far too small and the choice collection of Lincoln documents, memorials and souvenirs cannot be displayed. Mr. Fay's personal collection of Lincoln papers, pictures and documents more than fill the limited space at present.

There are nine acres in the Lincoln monument plot in beautiful Oakridge cemetery in Springfield, giving ample space for the erection of a fitting memorial and shrine to Illinois' gift to the nation.

Dolls of Gay Felt Furnish Inspiration For Children's Styles

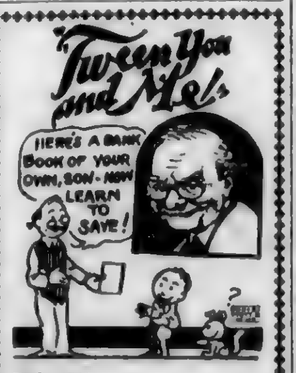
How often do we hear it said of this or that cunning tot, "She looks just like a doll." According to fashion's program for this season youngsters will be dressed to look more like dolls than ever. It is a fact, certain new styles have developed, the inspiration for which originated with a doll-maker.

It happened this wise—a certain famous Italian designer began his career by making dolls—both themselves and their clothing—entirely of felt. Their success was instantaneous. Nothing in recent years in the way of dolls has created more of a sensation than these felt masterpieces.

The amusing part is that these dolls are dressed as smartly as if they had stepped out of the pages of the latest fashion magazine. They wear chic coats or capes with hats to match or perhaps ensemble costumes which are carried out perfectly, even to the slightest detail, in color combinations and artful design such as only felt of gay hues can make possible.

Now comes the climax to this interesting doll episode. This same Italian genius, inspired by the success of his enterprise, is this season designing clothes for children typical of those worn by his famous character dolls.

The picture shows a tiny Parisienne clad in a cunning all-felt frock created by the well-known Italian designer of quaint dolls. This little tot's doll wears a dress made of the same material as that of her wee mistress. It seems that it is a part of the plan to complement these felt costumes for children with matching dolls. Some sets include hats with school bags to match.



Interest at this moment is especially focused on coats of felt in fascinating blues, roses, tans, mauve, green and other likable tones. These are enlivened with appliqus, stitching and insets in multi-colored effects. A hat, tam or bonnet to match accompanies each coat. Specialty shops are also displaying organdie frocks of American design, stressing the ensemble idea with felt trimmings matched to the accompanying coats and hats.

Among the most attractive felt imports reaching American shores is a tan felt coat which has cut felt flowers appliqued on the front panel. The hat is related to the coat in that it is of identical felt, inset with contrasting color.

All sorts of fantastic designs and colorings feature in these unique felt garments. For instance a most attractive coat of a grayish light green has rows of "pinked" felt stitched down to form a multi-colored border on all edges.

TO SECURE GREASELESS BROTH

Usually one waits overnight for greaseless broth or stew, for the grease to harden so that it can be easily removed. But the "great horned spoon" and a funnel, however, instantaneous greaseless broth may be secured.

When a funnel is put into the soup kettle upright, the broth from the bottom of the kettle, which is greaseless, comes up to the large part of the funnel, where it may be skimmed off with a large spoon and put into a cup.

The amateur gardener has found the funnel a good digger. Its sharp spout will burrow quickly into the ground, pulling up sufficient dirt to leave a hold just the right depth for planting. With a slight tap the dirt remaining in the spout is then loosened for covering the seed.

The funnel also makes a good strawberry and fruit washer in the absence of a strainer.

MODERN STYLES FOR WOMEN MAKES HEALTHY BODIES

A bishop has lately declared that women are today dressed more wisely and more healthfully than they ever have been.

Instead of inveighing, as do some of his clergymen, at the "immorality" of the present styles, he commends them.

His opinion will probably make no difference, one way or another.

Women dress in the style, whatever it may be.

If the style should next year demand dresses reaching to the ankles, and heavy hanks of hair, these would be worn.

No woman wants to be considered odd or queer, and she will be if she does not conform to the mode.

But the fact that so much ease and comfort, not to mention better health, has come with the change in hair and petticoats will be sure to make women resist long and effectively any effort of the Paris dressmakers to go back to the old raiment.

The reformers who continually clamor that abbreviated dress means abbevirated morals do not know what they are talking about.

There is no more immorality today than there was in mid-Victorian times, not nearly so much as in the days when the women in the French courts concealed their persons in flowing gowns, and piled their hair high on their heads.

One of the greatest advances ever made was the abolition of corsets and dom of the legs, so that women could get real exercise when walking, and not mince along the street in constant fear of tripping.

stays, and next to that was the free-

It should be the duty of older women to applaud and encourage modern dress for women, for there never were styles so sensible as now, and there never was a time when women had so good an opportunity to develop their lungs and muscles, and return to the fashion which reigned in the days when the Venus de Milo was carved from the marble block.

In a time when women can play golf and tennis, when they can swim channels and ride horseback, when they can walk forty miles in ten hours, fashions which free the form are necessary.

As we said in the beginning we are not sure how long these styles will last.

Paris hairdressers, who think they can look into the future, predict that in ten years from now there will be no more bobbed hair.

We hope they are wrong.

We hope also that the clergymen are wrong when they predict that woman's moral sense will soon lead her to eyclose her knees and neck in garments which will conceal them.

When she does that she will do it not because of any change in her moral sense, but simply because other women have done it.

Healthy minds are more likely to exist in healthy bodies, and there have never been styles which so well developed healthy bodies as those of the present.

Donald's Inheritance

By MRS. E. O. CARLSTON | Auther of "Donald's Deception" and "For Freedom."

"Do you want to go driving with me this evening, or does auntie allow?" he asked in a tone that was almost a sneer.

"I will go, Jimmie, but please leave auntie out of the conversation, as nothing you ever say is complimentary to her."

"Agreed." James responded. "I've got more important things to talk about any way," he added, giving her arm a significant pressure as they advanced toward the Clinton machine.

"Such as the result of the wrestling match last night, I suppose," Audrey said, innocently, seating herself in the rear seat of the car, James following.

"You know better than that, my girl," he said in a low tone which could not reach the chauffeur's ears, above the noise of the running engine.

"Where to, Mr. James?" inquired the chauffeur, who was taking Harry's place that evening.

"To Lover's Inn, Pat. It is about forty miles from here, the first place of amusement we come to the other side of Barclay."

"Barclay is just a little place, and you have to look quick to see it," James said to the girl at his side.

After an hour's ride, they reached a brightly lighted building, which was surrounded with a crowd of gay young people. James and his companion stepped from the machine. The chauffeur was instructed to park the car at a designated spot, and was told to wait there until time to drive them home.

After the rather monotonous winter, spent mostly within the walls of her father's home, the exhilarating atmosphere into which James had brought her this evening was quite enjoyable. She felt thrilled at the beautiful strains of orchestra music which floated through the night air. Her companion escorted her toward the direction of the music, and they were soon gliding over the glassy surface of the floor in time to the perfect rhythm of the music.

Audrey was oblivious of everything except the music, James Clinton and herself. James, catching the expression of her lovely blue eyes, partly shaded by stray ringlets of light brown hair, which the spring breeze had blown from their place, felt a sense of triumph at what he saw there. His exultation, however, had one phase that puzzled him. So far, his wooing had been prompted from a mercenary standpoint—the desire to fill his pockets with money that rightfully belonged to Donald. But what was that feeling that swept over him, for an instant as he admired the beauty of the girl he held in his arm, and as he thought of her. How wonderful she really was! Only for an instant did he experience this feeling, which, if properly nourished, might have grown into a real true love, a thing which James Clinton so far had only pretended to experience. He guided her toward a less crowded portion of the floor, and whispered in her ear.

"I would love to go dancing just like this all through life with you."

As another couple came too near at that moment to permit Audrey to reply, James was compelled to content himself with the encouraging smile she gave him. Presently they left the dancing room, and seated themselves at a table in an adjoining room where James ordered light refreshments. The young man knew now that his object had been attained, and that he would be engaged to Audrey Gordon before midnight.

They walked around among the crowd until the hands of Audrey's wrist watch indicated the hour of eleven.

"We had better go home now, Jimmie," she said. "Father will be furious if I stay out too late."

"I am ready; and I don't want to aggravate your father, as I may wish to ask him an important question before many days pass."

They soon reached the car, and found the chauffeur sleeping soundly, and snoring audibly.

"Wake up, you lazy Irishman," James said, shaking the man's shoulder roughly.

"What? - Be jabbers, and I thought I was in my bed; and here I be fifty miles from my parking place for th night. I'll make it in less than an hour and a half. My, I'm sleepy."

"For goodness sake, shut up. I'll get you something that will keep you awake long enough to drive us home safely. Excuse me for a moment, dear," he added in a low tone to Audrey.

Then he made his way back to the building, and after handing over a ten dollar bill to a person disguised as a beggar, and closing his right eye suggestively, soon returned to the machine with a mysterious looking bulge in the region of his hip pocket. Taking a glass which he kept in the car, he filled it full, and raised it to his lips; but Audrey placed her hand gently on his wrist.

"No, Jimmie, not tonight. Please!"

"Anything to please you, Miss Gordon. Doesn't auntie approve of that either?"

"No, and neither do I," she said.

"That's enough, Pat," James said to the man at the steering wheel, who had emptied one glass, and was preparing to refill it. "We do not want to meet with an accident."

Obedient to orders, Pat refrained from a further indulgence of intemperance, and soon had the Clinton machine headed toward the city. Due to a little engine trouble, they were detained for an hour or more, while the necessary repairs were being made.

"Enjoy yourself?" James asked the girl beside him.

"Immensely," she replied.

"Like me tonight?"

"I suppose so."

"Audrey, you know you do; I know you do. You love me. I saw it in your eyes tonight. Say 'yes,' won't you? I want you so!"

"Are you sure, Jimmie?"

"Absolutely sure. And you have kept me waiting long enough. Say it."

"Yes, then."

"And you will marry me, some day I don't expect you to consent to an immediate marriage, as you are so very young. But I want you in a year from now.

"We can decide that later. Oh, dear! What will Aunt Alma say? And my father! I am afraid she has caused him to share her dislike for you."

"Let's not worry about them, now, sweetheart. We won't mention our engagement for a while. In the meantime, you can prepare them for the news."

Before Audrey knew that they were nearing her home, the car slowed down and stopped. As it was very late, James bade the girl good-night, at the front door of her home. As she ascended the stairs, she noticed that her father was waiting in the hall above.

"It is after midnight, young lady," he said sternly. "Haven't I told you always to be home before twelve o'clock."

"I'm sorry, father, but it couldn't be helped this time. James' chauffeur had trouble with the machine—" she began.

"Same old story. That's what they all say. Go to your room."

Audrey obeyed, glad to terminate the disagreeable interview. She entered her room and locked the door. Then, not being sleepy, she sat down in an easy chair to think over the events of the evening. She felt rather pleased at the turn things had taken, but the element of supreme happiness, which she had always believed a girl experienced during the time of her engagement, was missing.

"Do I really love him, or is it infatuation?" she wondered. Unable to decide, she snapped off the electric light and retired for the night.

CHAPTER V

Several days later, when Audrey was descending the steps of the front porch, as the Packard belonging to the Gordons was waiting in front of the house to convey her to the city, where she intended to do some shopping, she saw the rural mail carrier stopping beside the mail box. When he saw the girl, he advanced toward her, and handed her two letters. She returned to the house, and placed them in a desk drawer, as she had decided not to open them until evening. Then she returned to the car, and was soon riding toward the city of Waterford, which was the home of the Clintons. After two hours spent in the various department stores, she went to the place where the car was parked, and ordered the man at the wheel to drive home.

As soon as she reached the house, she opened the letters, which had been delivered to her earlier in the day. The first was of little importance, but the second one, though short, contained an odd message. It read:

"For your future welfare, discontinue your friendship with James Clinton, as you and another person are being imposed upon. Also, beware of his brother."

The short note was unsigned but the envelope was post-marked "Waterford." Audrey's first impulse was to show the note to James, but she finally decided that such an act would be unadvisable. The girl wondered who wrote the note.

"Probably someone who is jealous of his preference for me," she decided. The words: "Beware of his brother," puzzled her.

"I didn't know he had a brother," she thought. "It is odd that his name has never been mentioned to me."

Being young, and not inclined to brood over trouble until it had actually overtaken her, Audrey determined to dismiss the matter from her mind, though she did not destroy the letter. Several weeks passed, and James was apparently being true to the girl who had promised to marry him at some future date. His manner and attentions toward her were all she could desire.

Then a cloud appeared above the horizon. One Saturday afternoon, the telephone rang at the Gordon home. Audrey removed the receiver from the hook and said:

"Hello."

"Hello, dear," the voice at the other end of the wire said. "How's my girl?"

"Fine." Audrey replied. "Coming over tonight?"

"I'm sorry, Honey, but I am called away on business. Must leave in an hour from now, and will not return until some time Monday."

"Oh, I'm so disappointed," but Audrey's tone proved her to be true.

"So am I, dear, but it can't be helped. We'll make up for it next week. A friend of mine is throwing a party next Saturday night. We're invited."

After a little more idle chatter, Audrey terminated the conversation and then called her girl friend, Esther Bernswick, who also lived in Waterford.

"What are you doing tonight, Es?" she inquired. "Thought probably I'd come over if you want me to."

"Want you to! Well, I should think I do. But that Jimmie of yours monopolizes too much of your time. Will he be here to see you tonight?" the girl asked.

"No, he is leaving town for a few days on business."

"Good! I'll have you to myself for once. Won't it be like old times, though?"

Evening, true to the arrangements made that afternoon, found Audrey and her chum together on the front porch of the Bernswick home.

"How are things coming along between you and James Clinton, if I may venture to ask?" Esther questioned her friend.

"The same as usual," Audrey replied.

"Now, I know about as much as I did before. Can't you give me more information than that? I tell you everything I know."

"Well, then, since you seem to be bursting with curiosity, we have been engaged for several weeks, though it isn't generally known yet. Please do not tell anyone."

"No, I won't," Esther promised. "But for goodness sake, don't marry in haste. Take time to think it over. Personally, I do not admire your taste," she said frankly.

"Why, Es!" Audrey exclaimed half indignantly. "What reasons have you for your opinions of my boy friend?"

"Just feminine intuition, honey. The gentleman doesn't appeal to me."

"You are like Aunt Alma. She is positively rude to him every time they meet, but you know she hates all men. Are you a man-hater too, Es?"

Just at that moment, Mr. Bernswick, Esther's father, joined the girls on the porch.

"No, not exactly," Esther replied in answer to her friend's question. "Not as long as daddy here is with me, anyway. But I'll confess, the rest all look alike to me."

"I am afraid your mind will be changed sometime," Mr. Bernswick said. Then he added: "Do you girls want to go to a movie tonight? If there are no objections, I'll be your escort."

An hour later, they were entering a downtown movie house. After the play, Mr. Bernswick suggested that they go to the ice cream parlor adjoining the theatre. As they entered the room, Audrey's eyes became riveted on the figure of a tall, muscular looking young man. Why she became attracted to him, the girl did not know, but, nevertheless, she was unable to take her eyes away from him for any length of time. Finally, by means of a large mirror, the young man's eyes met hers, for an instant, and he smiled. Then she turned away, and avoided the recurrence of the same thing, as thoughts of James Clinton and her attachment to him came to her mind. As they left the building, Esther noticed that her father recognized the young man, who had, for some reason, attracted her chum, as an acquaintance.

"I won't tell Jimmie about the gentleman you fell for," Esther teased her friend, as they again joined the crowd of shoppers and pleasure seekers. But Audrey was prevented from replying to her friend's remark. A familiar looking car was just drawing away from the place where it had been parked nearby, and in it, she saw, and of course, instantly recognized, James Clinton, who was supposed to be out of town on business. Seated beside him, was a voluptuous looking woman, to whom he was very attentive, so attentive, in fact, that he did not know he was being observed by Audrey and her friend.

"What did I tell you?" Esther whispered.

"Probably you were right. He certainly lied cheerfully. 'Out of town on business?' It's a wonder he couldn't be clever enough to pull a new alibi," Audrey said, disgustedly.

"Thought that you were easy, I suppose," Esther remarked.

"Easy! I certainly was. But never again."

Their tone was so low that even Mr. Bernswick was unable to catch all that they said.

"I wonder who the young chick was that we saw in the ice cream parlor," Esther said. "You seemed to know him, father. Who is he?"

"I thought you weren't interested in young men," Mr. Bernswick said, sententiously.

"I'm not, exactly, but some girls are, —Audrey, here, for instance."

"His name is Donald Clinton, son of the late Samuel Clinton, and I believe, the heir to a medium sized fortune," Mr. Bernswick replied. He of course, did not know of the will made by Mr. Clinton.

Audrey's mind was alert. Donald Clinton! Donald Clinton! The name repeated itself over and over in her imagination. Then, the words, "Beware of his brother," came to her mind. What was the mystery connected with the anonymous letter she had received? Her thoughts then reverted to the woman whom she had seen with James Clinton. Could she have written the note? If so, what was her motive?

As Mr. Bernswick's car was being repaired, they had ridden to the central part of the town on the street car, but intended to return in a taxicab. After waiting a few seconds, Mr. Bernswick spied a black and gray taxi bearing the sign "vacant," which he hailed. Just as the driver turned the cab back into the line of traffic, the auto belonging to James Clinton passed them, and Audrey, noticing that she had not been seen by James, followed a sudden impulse, and ordered the driver to follow the Clinton car, with the permission of her companions, of course.

The route they were compelled to take led them into the less pretentious section of the city to the same locality where the Clinton car had collided with another car the previous winter. Presently the machine they were following stopped, and both James and his companion entered a door to an apartment house on the north side of the street. Audrey scribbled the address in a notebook which she carried in her purse, and announced that she was ready to return to the Bernswick home.

Before retiring that night, Audrey wrote James Clinton a short note informing him that he could, thereafter, spend his leisure hours at 598 Hawtherne street. Her letter was so plain spoken and concise regarding her altered opinion of him, that a less conceited person than James Clinton would never have attempted to renew their friendship. Audrey returned home the following day, and when questioned by her aunt as to whether or not Mr. Clinton were calling that evening, she emphatically replied:

"Not tonight, auntie, nor any other night, with my permission."

"Why, child, what has changed your mind?"

"I found that he is not truthful," was the only explanation the girl offered.

But Audrey was mistaken when she said that her former lover would not be at the Gordon home Monday evening. At about seven o'clock, Audrey heard and recognized the familiar sound of the car, as it stopped in front of the house. The servant girl, who admitted the young man, had not been informed of the recent turn things had taken, so Audrey was taken by surprise, too late to avoid an interview with James, who decided to make the most of his time, fearing that he would be unceremoniously compelled to make his exit, if Mr. Gordon should appear upon the scene.

"Dearest, do you know I was deeply pained and surprised when I read the letter which I received from you today?" he began in a hurried and anxious tone of voice.

"I don't doubt that you were surprised," the girl replied.

"Then you don't believe that my feelings were hurt?"

"They may have been. Probably you are more conceited than I was ever able to imagine. My letter was not flattering."

"I should think not. But, dear, your accusations are wrong. I was out of town Saturday evening, and I can prove it; and I did not return until late yesterday evening. In your letter you mentioned 598 Hawthorne street. I am unfamiliar with that address, but by making a few inquiries today in that neighborhood, I learned that my cousin, who strongly resembles me in appearance, was in the company of the woman you referred to, who lives at that address," James said.

"You are wasting time and words on me, Mr. Clinton," Audrey said angrily. "I saw your features distinctly and know it was none other than you whom I saw Saturday evening. It is useless for you to say anything more. I also recognized the car as yours."

"But Audrey, I tell you again, it wasn't I whom you saw. As I expected to be out of town and no one in our family had occasion to use it, I promised my cousin that I would lend the car to him, little dreaming the consequences would rob me of my sweetheart."

"Your excuses and explanations are not satisfactory," Audrey said, with a tone of finality. "Please go."

"Not until I've bidden you goodbye in the usual way," he said. His tone was of a positive nature, and with a quick motion, his right arm encircled her, and his lips met hers.

"James Clinton, that is unpardonable. Go, I say," Audrey commanded angrily.

"I will, now. Goodbye. But remember, some day you'll be mine. I'll get you yet, by fair means or foul."

"We'll see," Audrey said. "You won't get me without my consent; and that, you will never be able to obtain."

But a presentiment of fear took possession of her. As James Clinton rode home in his car that night he realized that he truly loved Audrey and though this love in itself was an honorable emotion, he resolved to bring its object to terms one way or another.

CHAPTER VI

Donald Clinton was walking along the main street of the city of Waterford, not because he had a particular destination in view, or with the intention of keeping a certain engagement, but for the reason that time was heavy on his hands, and he had nothing else to do. He was thinking, however, of Audrey Gordon, a girl whom he believed he had never seen, but one whose acquaintance it would be to his advantage to cultivate, without further delay.

As it was now noon, he entered a restaurant, and seated himself at one of the tables. He had just given his order to the waitress when someone gave him a smart slap across the shoulders. Turning his head to see who was in such a joyful mood, he saw a friend and former school chum, Fred Poston, who took possesin of a chair opposite Donald.

"What is the matter, Don? In love, or is it some other calamity?"

"My trouble is that I am expected to fall in love before next January, and so far, have never met the girl on whom my affection is to be bestowed."

Fred looked at his friend with a comical expression on his face.

"What in the nation are you trying to talk about? Gone crazy?"

"I was never more sane in my life. My father—"

He was interrupted by the arrival of the waitress, who had brought his order. After she had placed the various articles in their proper places Fred gave his order. When she had passed out of earshot, Donald gave his chum a brief account of the terms of his deceased parent's will, omitting the name of the girl in question.

"And so far, you have made no effort to become acquainted with her?"

"No, and I'm not very enthusiastic about the prospect either. I cannot imagine what could have caused my father to make such a request."

"What is the girl's name? Do you know where she lives?"

"I have her address some place. Her name is Audrey Gordon."

An expression of amusement crossed Fred Poston's face. Possessing a fun-loving disposition, a little scheme quickly shaped itself in his mind.

"Why, I know Audrey Gordon!" he exclaimed.

"You do?" Donald said anxiously. "Then give me a description of the mysterious young lady. What does she look like? How old is she?"

"You'll be surprised," Fred laughed.

"Oh, come on, you're not a school kid now. Cut out the comedy act, and be useful once in your life. I asked for a description of the young lady."

"I couldn't possibly do it justice. But I'll promise this much. This girl and a friend of hers, also a little servant girl, are to spend a week at my cabin in the mountains. I'll invite her old man over for the week-end, too. If you will accidentally show up about that time, I'll introduce you to her, and as the place I have chosen for my cabin site is quite a romantic spot, you will have every opportunity to influence the girl to accept your offer. If course, I wouldn't tell her your object for cultivating her friendship. If I should, I'd probably be carried to the nearest hospital."

"That sounds encouraging," Donald said. "She must be one of these over-bred dominating women. One would judge so from your description."

"You don't know the half of it," Fred was nearly bursting with laughter. Then he quieted down as he noticed that he was attracting too much attention from other people in the restaurant.

"No, Don," he said in a modified tone, "I was just kidding you. She isn't so terribly bad. Let us change the subject. Remember when you used to play tricks on me in High school?"

Captain Hawthorne C. Gray, since his recent balloon flight into the upper air, has held the world's altitude record of 42,470 feet, or more than eight miles. Such a flight must be made under very hazardous conditions. His balloon carried 80,000 cubic feet of hydrogen gas, but even one of this size reaches a point beyond which it refuses to carry the passenger's weight. Captain Gray's thermometer, at a height of eight miles, showed the temperature to be 67 degrees below zero, and, according to his barograph, the air was more than five times thinner than the air on earth. He carried oxygen to sustain his life in the thin air, but at such an altitude the lungs do not function normally and the brain becomes foggy. There is also a danger arising from the greatly decreased air pressure, for on earth the atmosphere presses with a weight of 15 pounds on every square inch of the body. Asiatic crows have been seen flying near the summit of Mount Everest at a height of 27,000 feet, the highest altitude-record for any living creature except man. However, Captain Gray on his flight noted no indication of bird and insect life. The region between 15,000 and 30,000 feet is always calm even when there are severe storms on earth but terrific winds sometimes sweep through the region beyond.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT
By F. A. WALKER

"BE NOT AFRAID"

After you have recounted every enemy to mankind; after you have taken a census of all the evils and their results, you will, if you reason rightly, put at the head of the list and leading the whole procession, FEAR.

Fear is the handmaiden of Discouragement and together they have created greater destruction than any other two factors in human life.

Think over your own life and see how many times you have been deterred from attempting something for fear you would fail; for fear that that failure would bring upon you the derision of those you knew.

The human family is strangely much more willing to accept the warnings of fear than the encouragements of confidence.

Fear attains its greatest power and its most alarming proportions when the power of reasoning is most highly developed.

Reasoning, even if the reasoning is false, is as necessary to the beginning of fear as it is necessary to its elimination.

Two kinds of things you fear—the things you cannot avoid and the things which can be escaped.

If the danger is inescapable the fear is obviously useless.

If it can be overcome then the entrance of the element of fear only lessens our capabilities to establish our mastery.

One of the warnings which Jesus in His ministry frequently repeated was, "Be not afraid." He applied it to a score of differing situations and then almost always proved to His followers the baselessness of their apprehensions.

One of the great mistakes of many parents is that they teach their children to be afraid.

You have frequently heard a mother or a father say: "If you do that the bogy man will get you," instilling into the heart of the child a belief in something which does not exist and a fear which may never be quite eradicated.

Children should be taught, as far as may be, to fear nothing, and certainly in their little minds there should not be built up those terror-striking unrealities which may perhaps serve to keep them from mischief but at altogether too great a cost.

Nine-tenths of our fears are without sound foundation.

If we reason out the situation, however threatening it may appear, we will usually find a way to avoid the danger.

At any rate if we have got to fight let us battle free-handed and not hampered by alarm and dread.

The Sandman Story
by Martha Martin

KING SNOW'S GOOD TIME

"Such a good time as I've had this winter," said King Snow to Old Man Winter.

"Yes, I've had a splendid time!

"In the first place the children have made a finer snow man than I have ever seen. And that is saying a good deal. For in my day you will admit I've seen a good many handsome snow men."

"I should say you had," said Old Man Winter, "Yes, if you think they have been particulary fine this year they have been.

"You know what you're talking about and no mistake!"

"Well, I think I do," said King Snow, "and I do not think it is conceited of me to say so."

"Certainly not, certainly not," said Old Man Winter.

"I saw some wonderful snow men in village yards, in parks, in the country, and even in the cities.

"Perhaps you'd think that in the cities they wouldn't be able to make nice snow men, but I saw some beautiful ones.

"You know that last time Old Blizzard Boy and I had such fun?"

"I remember it well," said Old Man Winter. "I was on hand, too."

"Of course you were," said King Snow.

"Well," continued King Snow, "there were enormous snow banks in the cities, and in one city I saw all sorts of things done with these snow banks.

"I Saw Some Wonderful Snow Men," He Said.

"There were fine houses built—and one was so large that it had a real chair right in one of its rooms!

"It was a magnificent house.

"Then I saw shops made along some of these banks of snow—snow shops and snowballs on snow counters.

"That was a magnificent sight! A simply magnificent sight.

"But, as I say, the snow men were best of all. Some of the children had poured water over their snow men at night-time and they had frozen and were strong substantial looking snow gentlemen.

"Yes, it has been a nice winter," said Old Man Winter. "Of course I think the more wintery it is the nicer it is."

"Well, I'm your friend," said King Snow.

"I suppose now," he went on, "I must be thinking about packing up and leaving soon.

"I hear that Mistress Spring is planning to come three weeks sooner this year than usual.

"She does that once in awhile, you know, and all her family and friends come with her.

"First will come the Crocus children. They don't mind me so much as some of the others, though they don't love me.

"Then the Jonquil girls and the Daffodil boys will come along. Some of them will wear simple frocks and some of them will wear fancy ones with many petticoats!

"The Blue Myrtle family will follow and the Johnny Jump-Ups will come—and they'll stay, too, after Mistress Spring goes away.

"Then the Misses Tulip will come in all their glory and the Lily of the Valley family and the Striped Grass cousins will follow.

"As they come along some people will say, 'I almost forgot about those coming out and now, here they are!'

"Yes, soon I must make ready for Mistress Springtime and her parade, but I do not mind for I've had a glorious winter."

"So have I," said Old Man Winter with a hearty laugh.

MERCHANTS AND CLERKS MEET FEB. 15

Hilltop Merchants and Clerks Invited to Hear Special Speaker February 15.

How may business on the Hilltop be bettered? What part does one merchant play in the business of another? How may the buyer be better satisfied by the co-operation of the different merchants?

Answers to questions of the above type will be the main point of the address of L. H. Bulsch, Dayton, when he speaks before the Hilltop merchants at a special meeting to be held on next Wednesday, Feb. 15, at Hillcrest Baptist church.

Mr. Bulsch is being brought to the Hilltop through the co-operation of the Hilltop Business Men's association and C. H. Miller, salesman for the National Cash Register Co. for this district.

Mr. Bulsch is in the merchants' service division of the National Cash Register Co. of Dayton. He is known throughout the country for his timely discussions and aid to business groups. He spoke before the Hilltop Business Men's association during last summer.

This meeting of the Hilltop business men is open to all merchants and their clerks. It is especially important that clerks as well as the merchants attend this meeting.

Here Ten Years, Orebaugh Retires

W. H. Orebaugh, Real Estate Dealer and Builder Turns Business Over to Son.

After ten years of successful operation in the building and real estate business on the Hilltop, W. H. Orebaugh, has disposed of his business to his son, J. W. Orebaugh, and S. C. Lane.

Mr. Orebaugh first came to the Hilltop in 1917 and started to build homes which he sold to home owners on a small payment plan and during his business operations has constructed more than two hundred homes in this section, having built on all the older streets on the Hilltop and on many streets in the more recently opened sections.

Before moving to the Hilltop Mr. Orebaugh was a resident of Winchester, Adams county, Ohio, where he was actively engaged in the buying of live stock, tobacco and wool, being one of the owners of the first loose leaf tobacco house in Ohio, at Georgetown, and at one time was the largest tobacco man in southern Ohio.

He was born in Adams county, Ohio, and for thirty years was active in politics of that county. He was county commissioner for seven years.

In reminiscing of the past, Mr. Orebaugh said he was married in 1889 and went to housekeeping with $50 worth of furniture. He bought his first farm of 116 acres and had but $450 to pay down and paid for it when farm products were at a low level, hogs being worth 2½ to 4 cents and cattle 3 and 4 cents a pound. However, he paid for his land and bought more and at one time owned over 1000 acres.

Mr. Orebaugh firmly believes that anyone can succeed who is willing to start at the bottom and aim to climb to the top of the ladder. But to do this they must be conservative and use good judgment in their expenditures. He thinks now is the time to buy land, take the family onto it and with the automobile this man can work in the city and can raise his family in God's good pure air.

Since coming to the Hilltop Mr. Orebaugh has helped many people in moderate means to become home owners, and has been active in other philanthropic work. He is a member of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church and at present is president of the board of trustees. He was also one of the instigators in the organization of the Hilltop Building and Loan and is still one of the directors and stockholders.

Mr. Orebaugh left Tuesday afternoon for Sarasota, Fla., where he will spend three weeks.

The young people of Glenwood church will hold a Leap Year party in the social rooms of the church on Friday evening, Feb. 17, at 8:00.

The Past Officers club of Westwood Pythian sisters will hold their next meeting at the home of Mrs. Dickinson, 539 Armstrong St., on Feb. 21.

NEW STUDENTS AT WEST HIGH

Activities Get Started; Senior-Junior on Feb. 21; Alumni Party Feb. 20 at School.

Enrollment of West High school was swelled to over one thousand on Monday when the new semester started.

An alumni carnival will be given at the school by the newly formed alumni association on February 25. The money receipts of the program will go to defray expenses of the organization in carrying out their plans for decorations for the new school building.

West's basketball team will meet the boys from South high on the Central floor on Friday night. The preliminary game will start at 7:15 and the main game will begin at 8:15. Four of the best players of West were lost at the end of last semester due to the number of years in school. They were Wood, Walker, Trabue and Gill.

The staff of the "Occident" is being reorganized and the next issue will be on sale Friday, Feb. 17.

Men's Day Success at Hoge Memorial

Ladies' Aid Is Product of Men, Matson Tells Large Sunday School Audience.

The Ladies' Aid society is an accomplished product of the men," said George Matson in addressing the Sunday school of Hoge Memorial church on Sunday morning in connection with the annual Men's day of the church.

Mr. Matson in speaking on the subject "Men" pointed out the big part the man played in every home and his part in the family life. He stated that if it wasn't for the men there would be few women in the Sunday school.

"I saw a most pathetic sight a few Sundays ago," Mr. Matson continued. "I was on my way to the church and I noticed a man going down the street with a small child tagging on to his hand, another on the other side and a baby in his arms. They were on their way to Sunday school—his wife was already there."

In connection with this special event pocket testiments were awarded to the oldest man in the audience, one to the father and son who resembled each other most and one to the man who was most recently married.

James Fippin, aged 95, was the oldest man in attendance, George Matson and his son George jr., received the vote of being the father and son who most resembled each other and the award for the most recent married went to Leroy Saver.

The number of men in attendance was increased from 117 of last year to 175 this year. But the number of women shallowed that of the men with an attendance of 183.

A similar day will be held by the women on March 4.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mary Jones, 140 Brehl Ave., on Thursday March 1st.

The Junior High chorus will also sing under the direction of Miss Bernois Woodyard.

The Junior church will be guests of the adult church at the morning service when the first anniversary of the Junior church organization will be celebrated. A historical sketch of the Junior church will be given by Warren Kline, and Jean Fletcher will read the story of "Lincoln Helps a Little Girl."

Celebrating His 4th Anniversary

C. H. Campbell Has Seen Steady Growth in the Newer Business Section of the Hilltop.

Four years of successful business on the Hilltop in the newer section at Hague and West Broad street, C. H. Campbell, druggist, is celebrating his anniversary this week.

Mr. Campbell came to the Hilltop in 1921, immediately following his graduation from Ohio State University College of Pharmacy and was employed for four years at the Slater pharmacy, Burgess and Broad street.

Having faith in the growth and stability of the Hilltop community he opened his store in the newer business section just west of Hague avenue and has built up a business the Hilltop community is proud of, where courteous treatment and service prevail.

Mr. Campbell believes a business man should reside in the section in which he does business and with his wife and one child live at 91 S. Westmoor Ave. He and his family are members of Glenwood M. E. church, and at present he is a member of the official board of that organization. He is a native of Gallia county.

In celebration of his anniversary week Mr. Campbell is offering many specials in his various lines of merchandise.

A birthday party given in honor of Irene Wehrle was held Tuesday evening, Jan. 31, at her home, 2394 Pomona St. Games were played and refreshments were served. Those present were: Eleanor Ranck, Virginia Burris, Jeanette Hartman, Alice Tracy, Vivian Cregg, William and Margaret Stoner, Mary Louise Shivers, Jemibel Patridge, Esther McMarrow, Janice Munyon, Frances Rayburn, Thelma and Dorothy Keys.

Mason, Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Held, Mrs. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Jones.

J. E. Hite Buys $40,000 Site

Will Erect Bulk Filling Station on Newly Acquired Land on Sandusky Street.

One of the largest real estate transactions of the week was the purchase of the frontage of 198 feet on Sandusky street, between the T. & O. C. railroad and Pennsylvania Ave., by James E. Hite, owner of the Hilltop Supply Co. The land was sold for $[illegible].

Work will begin soon on a bulk filling station on a frontage of 78 feet now vacant.

This deal was handled through H. G. Butler, realtor at 2642 W. Broad St. Other transactions of Mr. Butler were:

C. H. Calhoun bought from James White a five-room bungalow in Elliott Ave., Valleyview; James Hynes bought the six-room single on Harris Ave., Valleyview, owned by W. A. Rodgers; exchange of the house of Dr. J. H. Oatt at 2633 Sullivant Ave., for the residence of Mrs. Bertha Scott, 2957 Crescent Dr., Broadview; exchange of property at 358 Whitethorne Ave. by Richard Chrisman for the residence of O. E. Stauch, 21 N. Burgess Ave.

West Broad Street P.-T. A Meeting

The West Broad Street P.-T. A. will meet in the school auditorium Friday at 3 p. m. After a short business session a Valentine tea will be enjoyed. Mrs. Mary Thompson Murray will render a vocal selection and Miss Judith Anne Garrison will give several readings.

HILLTOP SIX AND ZIPPERS IN LEAD

The Girls' Basket Ball league at Glenwood Shelter house is now well under way. The standing of the various teams is as follows:

	Won	Lost	Pct.
Hilltop Six	3	0	1000
Zippers	3	0	1000
Glenwood M. E.	2	1	660
Cardinals	2	1	660
Orange and Black	1	2	330
Hilltop C of C	0	3	000
Billy Goats	0	3	000

The games are closely contested and rivalry is very keen among those leading the league. The Glenwood M. E., a new but exceedingly strong and promising team, almost pushed the Hilltop Six out of first place, but were defeated by the score of 6-5. Fast pass work and accurate shooting are characteristics of the hard fought games.

The Junior classes on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons from 3:30 to 5:30 have increased in size, and about 20 girls of Junior High age are learning the fundamentals of gymnasium work and playing games such as volley ball, bat ball and others suitable to their age.

Considerable interest is shown in the handicraft class on Tuesday evenings and the fact that the attendance has almost doubled is evidence of the worthwhile instruction that is being offered. Many members have partially completed reed baskets and are eagerly planning more intricate pieces of work.

CHAIN STORE MONEY LOST SAYS CARROL

Speaker Declares Chain Stores Detriment to City—Home Owned Trade Essential.

The chain store takes everything out and puts nothing into our community. Chain store money leaves Columbus and is used in Wall street.

This was the essence of the address of George Carrol, secretary of the Ohio Wholesale Grocers' association before a very enthusiastic meeting of the Hilltop Business Men's association Tuesday night at the Matsonia Barbecue.

"The money leaves, taxes are higher, there's nothing left for civic improvements and your city suffers. In addition the chain stores have made toters out of our women and children," Mr. Carrol continued.

Mr. Carrol explained that the buying power argument of the chain stores does not hold good. "They haven't any buying power," he stated. "The public's the buying power. How can a buyer in New York city buy for the chain store of this community and be able to know how to satisfy the people here?"

The speaker pointed out that there are 38 chain stores on High street from Spring street to the Neil house. "Thirty-eight business men of Columbus have been replaced by these stores."

Mr. Carrol explained the plans followed in other cities to hold the chain system in check. "Home owned retail trade is absolutely essential."

Justin Silliman, Dr. G. F. Barber, Mr. Peck of Pavey-Johnson Co., W. C. Eidson of the Hilltop Building & Loan Co., and E. E. Jackson also gave short talks.

The organization endorsed the project of extending West Rich street across the B. & O. railroad at Glenwood avenue. It also endorsed Mrs. H. C. Currier as librarian for the new Hilltop Branch library.

A committee composed of H. G. Deems, chairman, George Matson and C. R. Pepple was appointed to make plans and other appointments for the annual picnic for next year.

The committee in charge of next meeting is composed of W. L. Millikin, C. J. Kohn and Dr. M. K. Weber.

SIDELIGHTS OF THE MEETING

Fred Sulzberger left the meeting before the dinner was finished. Someone called for a motion to adjourn thinking there would be no more business.

Justin Silliman, attorney, lost his father and found him behind W. E. Dolby.

Between courses Ray Haunts got musical and called for a song. But business men don't like to sing while food is in sight.

Harley Culp to C. J. Kohn, "What would you call your profession outside of being a doctor?"

A good imitation of gas attack is the smoke from the cigars of the business men.

Hear ye! Ray Haunts got his song fest—"Let Me Call You Sweetheart" and "There's a Long, Long Trail," led by Kohn.

SPRING AGAIN?

The groundhog saw his shadow unless he was a little late in getting up. Which means that we have six more weeks of winter—providing we believe the groundhog story. No one can tell what the exact weather will be but no doubt we will have some more winter.

Then following the winter comes the warm months of spring and the most delightful time of the whole year. And while it is delightful is the ideal time to beautify around the home.

So the business on hand now during the last few weeks of winter should be the planning and buying for the spring cleanup and repairs. Every home on the Hilltop can be improved in some manner by spring cleaning. Grass can be sown, fences fixed or flowers planted.

This last point should be considered by every family. Let's make the Hilltop more beautiful through this spring cleanup period. And why not make the place a little more refreshing by planting a few flowers here and there. Now is the time to plan. The time to execute these plans aren't far off.

GETTING RESULTS

Business men plan and worry as to how they may increase their sales or keep them up to standard during the dull seasons. Sometimes they spend their whole time on the outside telling others how rotten business is. But results really begin at home.

So it is with the merchant who wants results. One of the best ways to secure the best results is to begin working on your own employment list. If some member of the force has been successful in some detail it is wise to remember him by a compliment.

The story is told of a manager of a $20,000,000 corporation who never paid compliments. One day a salesman of the firm landed the biggest contract that had ever been taken. The salesman was happy over his results and expected a word from the manager. The words he got were, "There are plenty more just like it. Go out and get them."

Encouragement is what makes the wheels of business as well as the wheels of life turn on.

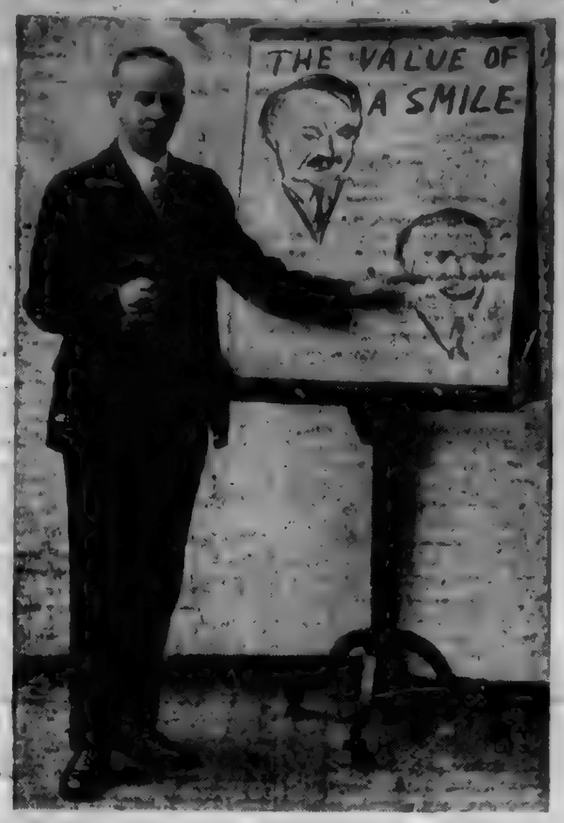
A FIRE PROTECTION

"What do you think I could save by cleaning my dresses in gasoline in my new electric washer," asked the housewife.

"You might be able to save the garage if the fire department isn't too far away. This reply comes from an old hand in the fire department.

A survey of the home cleaning industries of the United States shows that the number of fires that have resulted from this practice has been greater in Ohio and Indiana. During the past year statistics on the matter shows that fires from this source have been on the increase.

Little thought is given to the possibilities of fire when the housewife takes her can of gasoline and ironing board into the kitchen for the week's cleaning. Oftimes the thought comes too late and damage is rendered to the house and many deaths occur each year due to burns received in this manner.



An open flame is not always the cause of such gasoline ignition. Friction of silks and woolens will cause these goods to catch fire. And further caution should be taken due to the fact that a gasoline burn is very penetrating.

People will find that they will save by sending their clothes to a dry cleaner. There are many good dry cleaners on the Hilltop.

"Covered Wagon" Best Bet at Rivoli

See Aunt Mary "Rejuvenated" at Ritz

A Gentleman of Paris

Entertainment and artistic expression—that's Adolph Menjou in "A Gentleman of Paris," which comes to the Rivoli today and tomorrow. How would you like to find that your girl friend was the wife of your valet? And then how would you like to have the same valet shave you after he had found out that you had been paying his wife attention?

An Epic!

It was in 1848. A caravan of covered wagons started out across the grass lands toward Oregon. They are joined by another caravan on its way to California. Molly Wingate of the one train and Will Banion of the other, are attracted to each other. A rival's jealousy enters. The two bands separate, but later run together again and aid each other in disaster and Indian attacks. A runaway horse with Molly on it brings Will to the rescue and she learns that he loves her. The jealous lover tells Will he and Molly are engaged and Will heads for California. A year later the two are reunited in Oregon.

J. Warren Kerrigan and Lois Wilson have the leads in the picture. "The Covered Wagon" will be shown at the Rivoli Saturday.

Hard Boiled Haggerty

The above is the name of the picture for Sunday and Monday at the Rivoli. Milton Sills is a hard boiled "ace" in this picture of the army air forces. He is a sure shot when it comes to downing German planes over the trenches. And Molly O'Day, although an Irish girl, takes the part of the French lady.

"Metropolis"

Life as it may be a thousand years from now! That is "Metropolis." It is a development of the idea that the rich people will live on top of the earth and the poor will be slaves below. A machine is produced to take the place of workers and a general revolt occurs. Over 37,000 extras took part in the picture and 11,000 of the men have shaved heads. The heads are taken by English players and it is directed by Fritz Lang, a German producer.

Dangerous Age?

When is the dangerous age? Lewis Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson answer the question in "Lonesome Ladies." Stone says husbands are prone to cheat at 40 and Miss Nilsson states that the dangerous age for women is 35 years. This picture shows the outcome of ladies when they are in the lonesome age and also shows what part the men play in making them lonesome. It will be shown at the Ritz today.

A New Star

A new star comes to the Ritz on Friday in "Strait Shootin'." Ted Wells is the thrill producer this time. It's a picture of the desert and the Wild West, a mine possession and a pretty girl—Lillian Gilmore.

Mix-ture

Tom Mix again at the Ritz on Saturday. And Tony, the wonder horse, is here, too, in "The Arizona Wildcat." In addition to his usual thrills Tom plays polo and enters society.

"Breakfast at Sunrise"

Constance Talmadge in this farce comedy "Breakfast at Sunrise," is the picture for Sunday and Monday at the Ritz. She is a wealthy daughter of Paris and runs upon one of the "free guests" at the fashionable hotel. But he is in love with a dancer who does not return the love. So the wealthy daughter is married to the free guest more for spite than for love. But in the end they learn that they are really in live with each other.

Aunt Mary

Aunt Mary had the cash and she also had two nephews who were experts at spending it. But she later learned that the undertaker and the tombstone maker were not yet to enter her life so she rejuvinted herself and spent her own money. May Robson plays the lead in "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary" which is at the Ritz on Tuesday.

World Owes Much to St. Valentine

If for Nothing Else Than the Establishment of Pretty Custom.

It is a far cry from the year 270, with its pagan celebration and St. Valentine suffering martyrdom, down to the present one, and yet he still holds majesty in the heart of today.

Down through seventeen centuries has persisted a pretty custom which proves that human nature does not, after all, change so very much.

The origin of observances of St Valentine's day is somewhat clouded in obscurity, but it is fairly well established that the saint who met his death by being first beaten with clubs and then beheaded had very little to do with the celebration except that his day happened to be at hand when it became desirable to substitute a Christian festival for a long-established pagan observance.

In ancient Rome it was the custom during the greater part of the month of February to celebrate the Lupercalia, or feasts in honor of Pan and Juno; the latter deity was then named Februata; Februalis and Februlia. On these occasions part of the ceremonies consisted in placing in a box the names of young women and then as chance directed they were drawn out by the men.

Old Customs Modified

The leaders of the early Christian church diplomatically endeavored to quash all such pagan celebrations and superstitions. This was chiefly accomplished through changing the forms somewhat or substituting other thoughts or ideas, for it had been proven that it was impossible altogether to extirpate a ceremony to which the masses had become attached through generations of observance. Accordingly the outline of ancient ceremonies was followed, but modified in ways more in keeping with the Christian era. St. Valentine was a recently martyred priest, and as the festival of the Lupercalia had commenced about the middle of February it was natural to choose his birthday as the day of celebrating the substituted feast.

In various countries the celebration has taken on different aspects. At Norwich, in England, for instance, St. Valentine's eve is kept as a time for general giving and receiving gifts. In "Madder's Rambles in an Old City" is found a description of the scene, as follows: "The streets swarm with carriers and baskets laden with treasures; bang, bang, bang go the knockers and away rushes the banger, depositing first upon the doorstep some packages from the basket of stores. Again and again at intervals at every door to which a missive is addressed is the same repeated, till the baskets are empty. Anonymously St. Valentine presents his gifts, labeled only with 'St. Valentine's love' and 'Good morrow, Valentine.'"

"Fake" Valentines Common

Many of the gifts were hoaxes, much like April Fools' day, for continuing, he says: "The mock parcels that vanish from the doorstep by invisible strings when the door opens, monster parcels that dwindle to thread, papers denuded of their multiplied envelopes, with fitting mottoes all tending to the final consummation of good counsel, 'Happy is he who expects nothing and he will not be disappointed.' It is a glorious night; marvel not that we would perpetuate so joyous a festivity."

In a series of essays published in England in 1764-6 other customs of the day are given. One miss, it is recorded, pinned a bay leaf to each corner of her pillow and placed a fifth in the center; if she dreamed of her sweetheart the marriage was sure to take place during the year.

As the celebration of St. Valentine comes down to the present generation it is one of purely sentimental remembrance, emphasizing the modern tendency to sweep away the cobwebs of antiquity and retain the sociable customs of merit.

Wouldst thou fashion for thyself a seemly life?
Then do not fret over what is past and gone,
And spite of all thou mayest have left behind

TO HAVE FOR DINNER

The planning of three meals a day, as well as preparing them and clearing away the debris after each meal, is the work of at least twenty million housewives, year after year, in our own U. S. A. The mere washing dishes for a family of five amounts to two and one-half acre of dishes a year to handle over from shelf to table, from table to sink and back to the shelves. Monotonous! Yes, but the fact that she is doing this for the ones she loves best, makes the task a labor of love. Because of the sameness of her work, a vacation is a great necessity, even if it be taken a day at a time.

If one has plenty of means to provide varieties of food, the problem is not so great, but the vast majority of our American people must count the pennies and make them stretch as far as possible in buying food.

Chop Suey

Take two pounds either of pork or veal with a little beef or chicken four onions cut into small pieces, three stalks of celery cut into bits, one can of bean sprouts, a half dozen Chinese water nuts or potatoes, two teaspoonfuls of head molasses, two teaspoonfuls of salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper. Heat a little oil—two or three tablespoonfuls in a frying pan, add the meat, brown and cook until nearly done, then add the vegetables, one cupful of beef stock, the seasoning and molasses. Cover and cook an hour, using great care to keep from scorching. Serve with boiled rice and soy sauce.

Spanish Toast

Cut up two green peppers, a slice of onion, two sprigs of parsley and add a cupful of thick tomato sauce. Simmer until smooth. Toast rounds of bread, butter and put a spoonful of the tomato mixture on each with a poached egg on top.

Timely Suggestion For Those Who Are Letting the Bob Grow

The battle of the "bob" is waging fast and furious. Opinion is divided. Some say short hair must go. Others declare "never again" long tresses for them.

This much is evident, a period of transition for the coiffure has set in. Even the most ardent "bobbists" are entering a protest against stereotyped effects. Women are demanding a more distinctive individuality for the bob.

Exit the boyish bob, enter curls and swirls—thus are hairdressers giving answer to a clientele who are asking "something different." This by no means sounds the knell of the bob, but it does bespeak a reaction against all bobbed heads looking alike.

So much for the bob! But what of those who are letting their hair grow? It is a vexatious, trying experience, this matter of retaining one's beauty while the bob grows.

Experience teaches that the best way to start the process is to coax the hair to grow as long as possible at the front and sides. Curl the ends of these longer locks and pin them back over the shingled portion. Here's where the adage, "Necessity is the mother of invention," has proved out with the hairdresser who has devised all sorts of little contrivances to "pin on" at this point. Especially has the beauty expert sent curls to the rescue of those discarding the bob.

Rumor has it that curly heads are about to take the center of the stage. The illustration presents several charming new "curl" effects, each forecasting the return of lovely feminine coiffures. These curls may be bought or acquired by patient and "watchful waiting" for their growth.

A very girlish hairdress is shown at the lower right. It was acquired in this way: After the hair had been induced to reach a certain length at the sides, it was pinned back, with a view of concealing the short clipped portion, in order that the latter be given a chance to grow. The straggling ends were then rolled up off the nape of the neck and caught with a jeweled comb made for the purpose.

A very stunning arrangement for straight hair which has reached to beyond shoulder length is to comb it to one side and arrange in a "biscuit" as pictured before the mirror in this illustration.

SCHOOL LUNCH FACTS

MRS EMMA UNCAPHER
Teacher of Domestic Art and Science at West High School

IV. AMERICA

In America, the school feeding movement is comparatively young. In 1855, the Children's Aid society began to serve free lunches to the children of the industrial schools in New York city. In 1918 the three-cent lunches were served in these same schools. At about this time penny lunches were served in the Philadelphia schools. Brookline, Mass., is the only city reported to have had High School lunches prior to 1900. After two years of agitation and investigation, the Board of Education of Chicago in 1910, appropriated $12,000 for the experiment of installing lunch rooms in six city schools. The experiment proved a service in every way.

At the present time the serving of noon lunches to school children at the buildings is not limited to large cities. The remotest rural school is equipped for serving them on a more or less limited scale. School authorities of all sections of the United States are making an effort to provide school children with wholesome food.

Donald's Inheritance

By MRS. E. O. CARLSTON | Author of "Donald's Deception" and "For Freedom."

Donald should have been warned, but the sudden reversion from a subject that irritated him, to one of his boyhood days, had a pleasant effect upon him. They soon left the restaurant, and before they parted it was decided that Donald Clinton was to become acquainted with Audrey Gordon at the cabin owned by Fred Poston, and located in the mountains about ninety miles from the city of Waterford.

Donald went immediately to his home, but his chum, still laughing inwardly, hailed a taxi, and was soon travelling over the road with which James Clinton was so familiar, which led to the home of Audrey Gordon.

As Audrey was seated in the lawn swing in the yard at the side of the large house, Fred walked toward her. Her eyes were resting intently on the pages of a book. She was not aware of his presence until he spoke.

"Hello, little cousin," he said. "Glad to see me?"

"Glad and a little surprised," she replied, closing her book, and making room for him on the seat beside her.

"Audrey, I came to ask a favor of you. You know, I'd do anything for you. Won't you help me just this once?" he coaxed.

"I'll have to hear your proposition first," she replied.

"Are you acquainted with the Clinton family living in Waterford?" he asked.

"James Clinton and I used to be rather good friends."

"Is that right? Hm!" he exclaimed half aloud. To himself he thought: "Wonder if he influenced the old governor to make such a crazy request of Donald?"

"What's on your mind, Fred?" the girl asked.

"Are you acquainted with anyone else in the Clinton family?" he asked, ignoring her question.

Audrey's mind reverted to the night several weeks ago when her eyes and the eyes of Donald Clinton had met, and when he had smiled at her in a way she had not yet forgotten, though at the time she had not known who he was. But she did not, of course, mention the incident to Fred, and replied:

"I think my father used to know James' father, or I should say, 'foster father,' as James is only an adopted son; but I never heard dad say much about the family. They called on each other occasionally."

"Donald Clinton is a good friend of mine," Fred explained. "High school chums, you know. I want to play a little joke on him and need your assistance."

Audrey's eyes opened wide. To think that she should be requested to take part in a practical joke when Donald Clinton was to be the victim!

"Tell me about it," she said.

"It seems the young man has a desire to become acquainted with you. I promised to introduce you to him two weeks from tomorrow night at my camp in the mountains."

"But where does the joke come in? Am I it?" she laughed.

"I thought probably I could get your maid, Phyllis Parsons, to impersonate you for the occasion. Wouldn't he feel silly to think he had travelled that far out of his way to meet a woman with her unproportionate dimensions, and with such an unattractive personality!"

"You just want my permission to allow Phyllis to pretend to be me, Audrey Gordon?" the girl asked.

"I want you to come along, too, pretending to be a maid to the fat lady. You may, also, do the cooking. It will not take you long to learn. That will keep his journey from being a complete failure to him, as I don't doubt that he will fall for you, even though he thinks you are a common servant girl. If you wish, you may invite Esther Bernswick to join us."

"Your scheme sounds rather odd to me, but I'm game," Audrey said. "Been wondering how I'd put in the time this summer; and Es would enjoy the outing."

"You'll be busy, don't worry. I'll talk to Phyllis and hand her a check which I think will persuade her to accomodate us. She isn't as dumb as she appears to be. You will have to purchase the clothing for her and yourself. Bring enough dress material to cover a barn, and get the seamstress busy with some dresses for her. But don't select maid uniforms for yourself. Just buy some cheap but attractive, girlish looking dresses, and I'll guarantee you a fine time at my mountain camp. Bring your Aunt Alma along. She has a certain sense of humor in spite of her rather austere personality, and, of course, you should be properly chaperoned."

"But what about Esther? She will want to be with me most of the time. Donald Clinton may know who she is, and wonder how she and a servant girl could become such good friends."

"Don wouldn't know her from Adam. You needn't worry."

"The joke will be on us if the young man changes his mind."

"I'll take care of that," he said as he started toward the house in search of Phyllis Parsons.

Neither of the young people knew that their conversation had been overheard, and that a sulking figure quietly stole away from his hiding place, behind a clump of bushes, and after a roundabout circuit of the grounds reached the place where his car was parked on a nearby road.

After no little persuasion, Phyllis consented to the arrangement, after she had coaxed Fred to increase the amount of the check.

"I'll be humiliated somethin' 'turrible,' you know," she said.

"Phyllis, don't mispronounce your words like that. You will be supposed to pose as a lady, you know."

"Well, ain't I a lady? I'm as respectable as 'anybuddy'."

After no little arguing between the cousin of Audrey Gordon and the maid, Phyllis Parsons, Fred took his leave, promising to communicate with Audrey by phone at certain intervals, to complete the necessary arrangements for the proposed trip to the mountain camp.

CHAPTER VII

It was afternoon of a day in late July. Anyone who might have been standing near the summit of Echo Mountain, which belonged to a range of mountains in the eastern part of Pennsylvania, could have enjoyed a wonderful view—waterfalls, stony cliffs, beautiful grassy slopes, mountain wildflowers, and giant forest trees. In the valley below, was a river, which, from the top of the mountain, appeared to be a very narrow stream. There were also numerous foot paths and one roadway over which it was possible to drive a car, but where a slight variation from the true course would be fatal to the vehicle and its occupants.

Near the foot of the mountain, on a comparatively level space of ground, stood a small but cosy cabin, which had recently undergone a thorough cleaning and airing, as though its desolation was to be changed to a place of activity and enjoyment. Near the little house, which was built of logs, was a clear stream of water, which was fed by a spring several rods above the cabin. Spanning the stream was a little rustic bridge. The only sounds to be heard was the twittering of birds, the rustling of the leaves of the trees, the trickling of the waterfall, and other rural sounds which made one feel restful and even lazy.

During the night, however, and occasionally in the daytime, the sound of wolves and other wild animals was not quite so pleasant and peaceful. But the cabin had been made secure, and there was little danger to be feared from the animals.

At a nearby village, which was about five miles away, a train was pulling toward the somewhat weather-worn and dilapidated railway station. One passenger alighted from the rear coach, and with his hat pulled low over his face, he slunked past the gang of loafers in front of the small building, and avoiding the main street in the town, wended his way through the village into the open country beyond. Soon he came to a farmhouse, where he was able to hire a farmer to hitch up his horse to the old buggy, which had been considered an aristocratic vehicle in its day, and drive him to a cabin in the mountains which was located several miles from the one which has been described.

The farmer did as he was told, and accepted the money that was given him as a reward for his services without uttering a word, except to remark about the weather and remark about the condition of his crops. But although he asked his passenger no questions, still he had certain suspicions regarding the stranger.

"Reckon he thought I was a dumb hayseed!" the farmer murmured as he began the return trip to his home. "Huh! Don't I know a few things about old Jud Tompkins, the feller he went to see, who sleeps all day, and cuts up mischief all night. Guess I'll just keep an eye on that bird. There's been little enough excitement in these parts lately, but there'll be doins now, if that new comer is as mean as old Jud. Giddap, Fanny!" He gave the mare a smart crack with his whip, and soon reached the driveway of his home.

He had no sooner unhitched the horse, when he heard the sound of an automobile stopping in front of his house. As strangers were objects of curiosity in this part of the country, he quickly left the stable and hastened up the back walk. He reached the back porch just in time to greet the people who had walked around the house in search of fresh water. It was Fred Poston, Audrey Gordon, and Phyllis; also Mr. Gordon and Miss Alma Gordon, Audrey's maiden aunt, and Esther Bernswick. Mr. Gordon intended to remain with the party until the coming Sunday, when he intended to return to the city in order to be ready for business Monday morning. It was now Thrusday afternoon.

"Right this way, folks. We got a good well o' water. None better in the state," the farmer said, in response to their request for water.

"That is worth ten dollars," Audrey said.

Their thirst quenched, the party returned to the machine, followed by the curious farmer.

"I never see sich a contraption but what I feel glad I don't own one of 'em," the farmer said, wiping the perspiration from his face with a big red handkerchief. "Old Fanny's good enough for me and Matildy."

"Ever ride in a car like this?" Fred asked. "I'll give you a little ride just to show you how it feels."

"No—o, many thanks, young feller. Maybe I ain't got long to live, but blamed if I wanta die in one o' them things. Yours should've come by sooner if yer so anxious fer an extra passenger. I jest hauled a young dude 'bout your size out that a-way," indicating the direction with his finger. "Looked like he hailed from th' city, and judgin' from the company he keeps I'm a-thinkin' he'll be returnin', with the sheriff if he ain't kerful. But I ain't sayin' nothin', when I took his money fer the ride I give him," he added conscientiously, seemingly unaware of the fact that he had told everything that was to be told, together with the summary of his own opinions.

At the time, no one considered this item of news as being important but for some reason, the last words James Clinton had said to her repeated themselves in the mind of Audrey Gordon. "I'll get you yet, by fair means or foul."

By the time they reached the cabin, the sun was nearing the horizon. Fred, who considered himself an excellent cook, hastily prepared the vegetables for cooking. He lit the fire in the oil stove, and with the help of Phyllis, had a tempting repast on the table in an incredibly short space of time.

Being tired from their trip, they retired early—the two girls and the older women to a room on the second floor. Fred and Mr. Gordon occupied a cot downstairs.

Fred had arranged that Donald Clinton was not to appear upon the scene until the following Tuesday, as Mr. Gordon, being of a very sober nature, was not the person to have around when a joke was being played upon someone. The time allotted for Mr. Gordon's stay passed quickly, but uneventfully. All enjoyed the mountain air, and Audrey was delighted with her new surroundings.

"I feel just like a little girl again," she said to Fred one day. "This rope swing you made for me is just the thing."

"Glad you like it," he replied. "I don't want time to hang heavy on your hands."

"It won't, when Mr. Donald Clinton arrives. Say, Fred, don't you think we had better begin practicing the deception right away. I will have to get used to being called 'Phyllis,' and will have to learn a few things about the duties she has assumed so far this trip. Imagine me frying the bacon and making biscuits like she does every morning, when the nearest hospital is at least twenty-five miles from here."

Both laughed.

"Then I'll begin giving you instructions right now."

And they hastened to the kitchen where Phyllis had already begun preparations for the evening meal, which was to consist of fried ham, potatoes and gravy, corn-bread and milk.

"Now 'Audrey,'" Fred said, speaking to the woman in the big blue apron. "No, don't look surprised. That is to be your name for several weeks probably. Now change into one of your new dresses, and see if you can't act like you will when Mr. Clinton arrives. But stay," he said, after second thought. "We had better wait until Mr. Gordon returns home. He will wonder if it wouldn't be a good idea to consult the head of an insane asylum about the whole bunch of us if we try anything like that now. But he wants Audrey to learn to cook, so there will be no harm done there."

Just at that moment, Mr. Gordon entered the kitchen.

"What's all this about?" he said "Audrey taking the place of a servant and so on? Aren't you feeling well Phyllis?" he asked, turning toward the bewildered woman.

"Not at all, Mr. Gordon," she answered, which was quite truthful at that moment, as the woman stood in awe of her employer.

"Better go upstairs and lie down," he suggested.

"No thanks, sir. Guess I'll go out doors for awhile."

The action was suited to the word, and Audrey and Fred were left to cook the meal.

"Here, child, my goodness! Ham should be sliced before you put it in the hot grease. And besides, it takes longer to bake corn bread than it does to fry meat."

Fred mixed the necessary ingredients, explaining to his inexperienced pupil as he did so, certain things pertaining to the culinary art. Then he poured the mixture into a greased pan and carried it to an oven made of brick outdoors near the rear door of the cabin. Just as he returned to the house, a loud thud was heard, the noise coming from somewhere near the front of the house. Audrey and Fred both hastened in the direction of the sound. When they reached the front porch, an odd sight was waiting for them. There, on the grass, sat Phyllis, groaning in pain. Beside her, was about twenty-five feet of rope; and a short distance away, a smooth board that had been used as the seat for the rope swing.

"Don't know what made the thing break," Phyllis said, dejectedly. "Rope was no good, I guess."

"The swing wasn't made to hold two hundred pounds," Fred said in an aside to Audrey. Then louder: "Don't worry, there is more rope in that shed back of the cabin. Are you hurt"

"Not very much. My neck feels stiff; can't turn my head; both of my arms ache. One of my ankles is pretty sore, and I've skinned my knee-cap. My thumb feels out of 'jint,' and my jaw feels like it had hit somethin.' Outside of that, I'm all right, though. But what's that burnin'? Might 'a knowed you youngsters couldn't cook a meal by yourselves. Told Mr. Gordon I wasn't feelin' good. Huh! Maybe I don't feel all in now." And she hobbled toward the front door, and into the kitchen, where the overdone potatoes were sending a disagreeable odor through the house.

After a few minutes, Phyllis succeeded in restoring chaos to order, and the evening meal was served on a table under a large tree.

The following day, Fred took Mr. Gordon to the railroad station, taking Esther along, leaving Audrey and Phyllis Parsons alone at the cabin. The big car had scarcely gone out of sight when Audrey heard a rap at the door. She went to see who the caller was, and was surprised to see her former lover, James Clinton, seeking admittance to the cabin.

"What are you doing out here?" Audrey asked.

"My dear girl, I heard that you were coming to this part of the country, on a vacation trip, and as I still love you, I was tempted to follow you. So here I am. Aren't you going to invite me in?"

"No, James Clinton, I am not," she replied indignantly. "You have forfeited every claim to my friendship, and I want you to cease annoying me."

"So you won't let me come in, after I have come so far as this just to be with you for a few minutes."

"I have given my opinion of you. It is unchangeable(so you had better hurry to the station before that train leaves for Waterford."

"If you won't let me come in of your own accord, I shall enter otherwise."

He jerked the screen door open and was in the room before Audrey could move. He caught her in his arms, and kissed passionately her forehead, cheeks and lips.

As soon as she could regain her senses and get her breath, she attempted to scream, but her cry was muffled by James Clinton, who placed his hand over her mouth. She hoped that Phyllis or her aunt had heard the sound that she had made, but to her dismay, no one seemed to be in the house but herself and James Clinton.

Looking through a rear window of the cabin, which was in direct line with the front door, near which she and James were standing, Audrey could see her aunt and Phyllis seated on a rustic bench several rods from the cabin. She began to struggle fiercely, but to no avail, as the clasp of James Clinton's hand over her mouth was firm, and he held her body securely with his left arm. As she could think of nothing else to do, she kicked her captor savagely.

"Cut it out," he growled. "It won't do you any good."

He, too, was watching the women back of the cabin intently, hoping they would not take a notion to come toward the house. Then he hastily carried her away from the cabin, retaining his hold of her mouth to prevent her from screaming for help.

"Jud!" he called in a low tone, which was answered by a dark complected wicked-eyed man of about forty years of age, who raised his head slightly above the bushes.

"I've got the girl. Here, you may carry her over to our hut. She's too wiggly to be taken with ease."

Teapot Dome! Famous in the world of politics for the rumor that several domes were involved that should not have been. Boston had its tea party and we have taken the old tea pot out and filled it with oil. But no one seems to like the taste of the liquid after all the world has found out.

Fortune tellers go a long way in some peoples lives toward making them optomistic. Old maids and bachelors go back to childhood when the fortune teller says that there is a "he" or a "she" to come into their lives.

The groundhog saw his shadow and we have before us six weeks more winter. Fine, says the clothiers and the coal dealers. Too bad, say the man with the empty coal cellar. But even a groundhog can never please everyone.

Some people say that children should be allowed to believe in Santa Claus because of the enjoyment they get out of it and because they are only young once. Even so, we should not destroy the faith someone has built up in the fortune teller. Like the Santa Claus story—they find out sooner or later.

Valentine Day is on its way. Even here the woman show their influence by pointing out that the day of the paper valentine greeting is past. To some it is another Christmas—gifts. One way for a young fellow to solve the problem is to use the adage the "true love never runs smooth."

Speaking of valentines—will the old story of leap year hold good here?

A fellow tried to sell his body at the university the other day for the sum of $25. When bodies get so cheap as that we can easily judge that there is one part of the body that isn't just as it should be.

FARM FOLKS VISIT O. S. U.

Joe and Josephine Show the Folks the Workings of the Big Educational "Mill."

Last week was a big event in the lives of many farmers of this state. The occasion was the annual Farmer's Week held at Ohio State university. Over 4000 farmers were in attendance and prominent speakers from all over the country were present.

To Joe and Josephine it was a time to show the folks from back home just what went on at the big school. And both sides thoroughly enjoyed the whole week.

On Tuesday Joe took his dad and mother around to his fraternity for dinner. "I like the boys fine," said his dad after they had left the house, "but I wouldn't be able to get along on that food very long." Joe then explained that he had hit the whole root of dissension in fraternities.

On Thursday a fellow tried some high salesmanship at the university by trying to sell his body to the anatomy department for the small sum of $25. The week before a colored woman overflowing with alcohol tried the same thing but neither were accepted.

Sometime in April the six most beautiful co-eds of the campus are to be selected by a nationally known judge of pretty women. His name is being withheld until later. Josephine is all primed for the big event already. It isn't to be a bathing beauty contest but they will be judged on the merits of the way they appear as co-eds at the big school. Poor dad will be called upon in many cases no doubt to give a little to help the beauty of his daughter in the college beauty contest.

Josephine was one of the favored misses of the campus on Friday night and attended the Brigade Prom held at the Neil house. To a Freshman girl it is quite a thrill to attend this dance with one of the cadets. And on this occasion a cadet is a cadet in real fashion. His boots are shined like glass and his uniform is spotless and without wrinkles. One would never think they were the same fellows who go to classes covered with mud and horse hairs after their riding and drill periods.

The old time dances came back into style again during Farmer's Week when a representative of the Henry Ford School of Dancing, Benjamin Lovett, came down to teach the old-time square dances. Both young and old took part. University students seemed to take to the idea as well as did the older folks. Mr. Ford is trying to give the country the best in old-time dances and has his teachers at all such meetings as the one held here last week. Mr. Lovett says the day of the Charleston and the Black Bottom are past but that jazz is here to stay but it will not injure the old-time dances.

This is leap year and a pawnbroker of much importance in the lives of many university students announces that the year has been a detriment to his business. He probably bases his assumption on the fact that the girls are better managers than the fellows and that many boys are letting the girls speak for themselves. Evidently the girls are getting results, too, because the owners of the pawn shops say they have far less fraternity pins on hock than usual. More pins are being planted.

Mid-term exams are in full sway at O. S. U. and the time has almost arrived when the midnight oil begins to burn till after midnight in fear that the final exams may prove to be too much.

Student Council Elected at West

John Wolf Elected President of Newly Formed Student Governing Body.

Student affairs of West High school will be handled through the newly established student council from the beginning of the week. The council began to function on Tuesday. The officers of the new organization were elected on Monday.

Student councils have been functioning over the country in the high schools for several years and have been successful in every respect. The idea of student government originated in the west and has continued to be used very extensively.

Students and faculty at West High school are very well pleased with the new plan of student government and all indications are that it will operate successfully from the beginning.

Some of the duties of the council will be to check on the absence and tardiness of the various classes, care for lost and found articles, help in the cafeteria and aid in all student activities and class affairs. Many other duties will be developed after the council has been established awhile.

The council is made up of two representatives from each registration room. Officers of the new council at West High are: president, John Wolf, '28; vice presidents, Marjorie Simmons, '29, and Donald Jeffries, '29; secretary, Vesta Bryan, '30; treasurer, Frances Lenhart, '28.

SLIPPER AND BURGLAR LOST IN FRUITLESS EVENING CHASE

Lost: A burglar and a man's house slipper.

Wade F. Williams, 2920 Crescent Dr., lost both of the above on Sunday night when he gave chase to the burglar who had attempted to gain entrance to his home about 10:30 p. m. His chase was fruitless and he lost sight of the man as he neared Broad street. The loss of the slipper made travelling hard.

The man was attempting to climb to a second story window when he was noticed. He was described as a very tall colored man.

TWO MEN KILLED AT BROAD STREET GRADE CROSSING

West-Bound Passenger Crashes Into Auto Tuesday at Midnight.

Two more victims were claimed by the grade crossing of the Big Four railroad at the West Broad street intersection, at midnight Tuesday night, when the automobile of Basil Yaneff, 50, of 599 Hanford street, was struck by a west bound passenger train and demolished.

In the machine with Yaneff was Peter Kerkoff, 45, of Brooklyn, who was instantly killed. Yaneff lived a few minutes after being taken from the wrecked auto. The wrecked coupe, with the body of Kerkoff, was carried almost 500 yards before the train could be brought to a standstill. The body of Yaneff, badly mangled, was picked up within a short distance of the crossing. Henry J. McGraw, 372 Marshall St., was the conductor of the train, and John Hammond, Springfield, was the engineer.

Because of a fine mist, which made it difficult to see far ahead of the headlight, Engineer Hammond said he did not see the automobile until he had nearly reached the crossing, and realizing a crash could not be averted, he applied the brakes to his train, bringing it to a stop as quickly as possible. Tires and accessories from the wrecked machine were scattered along the tracks for several hundred yards.

The automobile was traveling west in Broad street at the time of the accident and the occupants were evidently unaware of the approach to the crossing or were trying to beat the train across.

According to Conductor McGraw, the accident was witnessed by Frank Cutler, Esther and Elmer Loveless, all of Plain City, and Vernon Martindale of Galloway.

The bodies were taken to the undertaking establishment of C. J. Kohn in the police ambulance.

This crossing is one of the most dangerous in the city and has been listed as one to be eliminated, funds for which have been appropriated.

West Side Scouts Attend Meeting

Good Parents Are Needed for Good Scouts, Elliott Tells Boys and Parents.

A Boy Scout must be hard but not tough, A. W. Elliott, scoutmaster of Troop 48, told the congregation of Hoge Memorial church on last Sunday evening. A large percent of the audience was made up of Boy Scouts who were there in celebration of the 18th anniversary of the Boy Scout movement in the United States. Troops 35, 18, 21, 9 and 45 were present.

Mr. Elliott pointed out that a good scout must have good parents. He explained that the teachings of the parents should measure up to those of the scouts.

"I once thought that every boy of twelve years or over should be a member of the Boy Scout organization," he said. "But I now see that a boy must have his heart in the work to be a good scout."

Mr. Elliott illustrated his address by points from the Boy Scout oath and explained the work by the scout manuel. The scout manuel is second to the Bible in sales, he stated.

Over 100 Boy Scouts renewed their pledges by repeating the oath in unison.

The scouts were called to worship by the scout Bugler and the processional was led by Deputy Scout Commissioner L. W. Gobes. This was followed by the flag salute by Scoutmaster Charles Page. The oath and laws were led by Scoutmaster R. C. Kadel.

Miss Lulu Renner, 2021 W. Broad St., who has been seriously ill with influenza for the past five weeks, is much improved.

DeMolay Chapter To Hold Ceremony

Master Masons Invited to Attend Services at Woodmen Hall on Saturday Eve.

Columbus Chapter, Order of DeMolay will give degree work and a ceremonial at the Woodmen of the World Home, 38 W. College St., on Saturday evening. All Master Masons are invited to attend and will be admitted by their Masonic due cards.

Columbus Chapter of DeMolay was installed by the grand chapter on October 18, 1922. Twelve hundred young men have been initiated by the Columbus chapter to date. Due to the fact that a member ceases to be an active member when he reaches the age of 21, there are now 495 active members in the chapter.

The Order of DeMolay originated in a boys' club of nine members in Kansas City and was fostered by Mr. Frank S. Land. In March, 1919, more boys desired to become members and were accepted. At this time Mr. Land conceived the idea of a ritual and Mr. Frank A Marshall, an editor of a Kansas City newspaper, utilized his idea by writing the present ritual.

Many cities in the vicinity of Kansas City, observing this wonderful boys' movement whose purposes were to make better boys, better men and better citizens, and whose degrees taught reverence, patriotism, filial love, clean living and good citizenship, wanted it installed in their own town or city.

In March, 1921, the grand council was formed to oversee the work of the various chapters.

The Order of DeMolay started in 1919 with one chapter of nine members. In 1927, there were 1500 chapters with 200,000 active members. In 1924 it became international. There is at least one chapter in every state in the United States, and chapters have also been instituted in Canada, Mexico, Panama Canal Zone, Porto Rico, Philippine Islands, France and Italy. The ritual has been translated into the languages of all the countries represented. There is also a Battle Fleet Chapter whose members are all sailors.

West Meets South On Friday Night

West High basketeers will play the South High team on the Central floor Friday night. South is well on the way to championship and the usual scrappy game is expected.

Loss of the four star West High players was noticeable last Friday night when the Cowboys met East High on the Central floor. But much credit is due to the fighting spirit of the reorganized West team for holding the score as low as 23-26 even if the East team did have the best end of it.

During the first half of the game West had the best end of the score but East rallied at the half and came back with too much fight for the Cowboys.

Highland Assembly

The Highland Junior High school will hold an assembly next Tuesday afternoon in the auditorium of Glenwood M. E. church. A program in commemoration of Washington's and Lincoln's Birthdays will be presented. Mr. H. H. Beighley, principal of the school, will preside.

"Hit Hard; Fight Fair"

Get Lessons and Act Right, Says Highland Junior High Boy.

Quite a number of unique papers were handed in by a Highland Junior High class recently when the instructor in the civics class requested the pupils to write a creed of their belief.

Among the papers was one entitled "An Education Creed," which is as follows:

"I believe in going to school and trying to get as good an education as possible. Go to school and like your teacher whether you want to or not. Get your lessons and act right. Get to your classes on time and never be tardy or absent if you can help it. Always do as your teachers ask you and never talk back to them. When you start a fight in the schoolyard you disturb a great many children. Your teachers try to make it comfortable for you, so you should try to do the same for them. Treat your teachers right and your teachers will treat you the same. In other words, 'Hit hard, but fight fair.'"

Rev. W. O. Nease at Nazarene Church

Rev. E. L. Elford, pastor of the Warren Avenue Nazarene church has been conducting evangelistic meetings at that church for the past week in place of Edna Banning, who was to have conducted the services. Miss Banning was unable to come to Columbus on account of illness. Sunshine Ben Sutton and wife are conducting the song services of the meetings.

Rev. W. O. Nease, a noted evangelist of Sioux City, Ia., will carry on the meetings this week.

CLERKS MUST BE SALESMEN SAYS BUISCH

Must Have Smile and Give Service, Hilltop Merchants and Clerks Are Told.

The day of the gum chewing clerk is past.

Hilltop business men and their salespeople were told this and many more things in regard to the part clerks play in getting trade, by L. H. Buisch of the merchants service division of the National Cash Register Co. when he spoke last night at the Hillcrest Baptist church.

A large audience of business men and their clerks heard Mr. Buisch tell how trade could be held on the Hilltop and with the home-owned store. He illustrated his talk with various charts and drawings.

Those employed by the modern business man to take care of the sale of his goods should not be called clerks. Instead they are salesmen or saleladies. The trouble with too many stores is that they have clerks in their service and not salespeople, Mr. Buisch brought out.

He explained that a clerk was the person who stood behind the counter, displayed the goods, wrapped the package and took the money. The salesman is one who meets the customer with a smile and actually gives a sales talk or demonstration of the goods.

Mr. Buisch inferred that the chain store is here to stay. The retail man will never be able to drive the chain store out or will the chain store be able to drive out the independent man. But the home-owned store will be compelled to give service equal to that of the chain store if the business is to contine coming their way. In this same light he pointed out that too many stores have dirty appearances and many of them have clerks that appear as dirty as the windows or floors of their stores. A good store must be clean and orderly arranged at all times.

Co-operation is needed among the independent merchants says Mr. Buisch. If they start something good they should continue it and not let it drop by the wayside.

This is Mr. Buisch's last trip through this section of the country for a long time. He is scheduled to speak before the National Chamber of Commerce soon. This brings out the fact that Hilltop merchants were very fortunate in having him speak to them and their salespeople. He was brought here through the courtesy of C. H. Miller, salesman of the National Cash Register Co. in this district.

President Is Assassinated

Washington, April 14, 1865—Washington was thrown into an intense excitement a few minutes before eleven o'clock this evening, by the announcement that the President and Secretary Seward had been assassinated and were dead.

The above is the lead to the story of the assassination of President Lincoln found in the New York Herald issue of April 15, 1865. The copy of the paper is on display in the window of Budd's Barber shop, 2350 W. Broad St.

The greater part of the whole front page of the paper is taken up with the details of the murder. One column contains 11 inches of headlines and eight inches of news of the event. Full details are given in other columns.

The headlines read —IMPORTANT —Assassination of President Lincoln— The President Shot at the Theatre Last Evening—Secretary Seward Daggered in His Bed but not Mortally Wounded—Clarence and Fredrick Seward Badly Hurt—Escape of the Assassins—Intense Excitement in Washington—Scene at the Death Bed of Mr. Lincoln—J. Wilkes Booth, the Actor, the Alleged Assassin of the President, &c, &c, &c.

"Hang him, hang him," were the cries from the audience of the theatre when they noticed that the president had been shot by the actor.

Other news items in this interesting old paper pertained to Jefferson Davis' removal from the capital and reviews of several battles, news of the army of Grant and Sherman and of the affairs of state at Washington.

Another interesting part of the paper is the news from abroad which consists of about four inches of type telling of the news of foreign ports. The only source of such news at that time was from the ships that came in from day to day.

At the time of the president's death the New York Herald was owned and edited by James Gordon Bennett. The price of the paper was four cents.

"Aaron Slick from Punkin Creek" is being given tonight in the auditorium of the Hillcrest Baptist church. It is being sponsored by the Hilltop School of Music. Music will be furnished by the school trio.

LUCY SHOPS ON HILLTOP

Being a woman I like to shop and being in the newspaper game I am naturally nosey, so I dropped into a couple of shops on the Hilltop and this is what I saw—

Stunning new spring suits with style stitched into each seam and in all the wanted spring colors. But I haven't told aything yet, for best of all they fit every size purse for the prices range from $12.50 up. Just drop into Seiller's and see for yourself if they do not have it.

Being a woman as I said before I am naturally interested in men so I dropped in at Shank's to see if the boy friend was really wearing what the "well-dressed man will wear." Well, I forgot all about the boy friend when I saw the nifty new golden tan, welt brim Stetson (especially when the clerk put it on to show me how it should be worn, brim turned down). "Nits are new and they are awfully good this spring" advised the alert clerk. Well now the only "nits" I know about weren't so new nor so good so I naturally was curious. This is what I learned—they're neckties, really they are. They are Jacquard weave ties in plain colors. The one I liked best was golden tan, just the shade of the hat.

And I saw the best looking—but I'll tell you about that some other time.

Lucy.

SMILE AND THE WORLD SMILES WITH YOU

A truer statement was never made. Test it out for yourself. When you get up in the morning, get up with a smile, meet your family and your friends with a smile—see what a big improvement it makes in your day.

Smiling will get work done quickly and efficiently. Smiling is so much easier to do than frowning. The frown of determination may well and profitably be replaced by the smile of willingness to serve.

Smile at Neighbor Jones and he will smile at you.

Smiles tend toward happiness in the home and in the community. It carries with it its own reward—a knowledge that each day we are doing our share toward making this a better and happier place in which to live. Our entirely when met with a smile.

Smiles make little troubles out of big ones, and little troubles disappear.

Let's make the Hilltop a community of miles and miles of smiles.

MODERN SUPERSTITIONS

When superstitions are mentioned we think of black cats, ladders and other things aside from natural life.

These are things of the past and modern superstitions have to do with the thoughts of people of today. The greatest of these is the thoughts that people have regarding what they can and cannot do.

Too many people think they cannot do too many things. And as long as they are superstitions concerning their abilities they will do but very little.

"As a man thinketh." This applies here. If the thoughts of what cannot be done are not brought into the picture and only the thoughts of what can be done are considered, marvels may be worked.

DOWN WITH SMOKE

All about us we hear of the campaign being carried on to eliminate the smoke over the city and to make Columbus a cleaner city. This campaign applies equally well to the Hilltop.

In regard to cleanliness our section of the city will rank well with any others but even so there are many cases where improvements may be carried out.

Careful furnace firing is the best remedy for the smoke evil. The after effect of the smoke is the coal soot left on the sidewalks, porches, and roofs. It sometimes penetrates the small openings of the houses and finds its way inside.

An investigation of the amount of soot on your front porch or your sidewalk will reveal to you any careless furnace stokers in your neighborhood. It's a good policy to begin at home by careful firing.

HERE AND THERE
By C. C. H.

Experiments were carried on last week to show that brunette were more emotional than blondes. Possibly a lot of the emotional senses of some girls were destroyed when they applied the peroxide.

• • • •

The day of the weeping willow woman is no more but we feel that the experiment is O. K. because brunettes really are more emotional than blondes. We attribute this to the icy appearance of the blonde. Evidently gentlemen don't prefer the emotional kind if they prefer blondes.

• • • •

Every man to his own judgement after all. Every brunett has her own special qualities or—her bottle of peroxide.

• • • •

We sometimes think of the many things that go wrong with us in this world but they aren't half so bad as the things that might go wrong.

Romantic History of Mount Vernon's Roses

It used to be the custom at Washington's estate, Mount Vernon, for a distinguished guest to plant a shrub bush or vine before his departure—just so later, in the 80's, visitors a e found wrote "sentiments" in the family autograph album. When Nellie Custis became engaged to Justice Lewis a rosebush was planted at Mount Vernon to commemorate the event.

Martha Washington was very proud of her rose garden, to which she devoted much time and thought. It was on the north side of the house, between the lawn and the negro quarters. The mistress of Mount Vernon was locally famed for her rose water and for a perfumed unguent made from rose leaves which she was fond of presenting to her friends.

Justice Lewis proposed to Nellie Custis and was accepted by her in a corner of the rose garden one moonlit evening, and the momentous scene was witnessed by a negro gardener whose presence was, of course, unsuspected by the sweethearts. Next morning the gardener planted a rosebush on the spot where the troths had been plighted.

Not long after the wedding Sambo received permission to marry one of the house servants." He led her to the rosebush, seated her on the grass where Nellie Custis had sat, plumped down beside her and popped the question. After that all the negro swains on the plantation did their courting beside the magic rosebush, which was believed by them to exercise a happy influence over sweethearts.—New York Times.

Washington and His Home

Where Washington Worshiped

An interior view of historic Christ church in Alexandria, Va., just across the Potomac river from Washington, and the mecca of numerous tourists who visit the national capital. On the left the pew occupied by George Washington when he attended services in this church is shown with open door. The church was completed in 1773 and Washington's funeral services were conducted from it in 1799.

The church where George Washington served as vestryman has been restored for preservation as another shrine to the first President. The ancient building, six miles out of Washington on the Lee highway, was first planned when Washington and seven other vestrymen met in the old frame church that has been built on the site in 1734 to decide whether to repair this building or to erect another. They decided to build a brick church on the same site and James Wren, a descendant of Christopher Wren, noted church architect, was commissioned to prepare the plans. The contract was awarded to him at a price the equivalent of $3,000. The church remained in religious service until the Civil war, when it was used first as a hospital, then as a stable for Union cavalry.

Homage of World Paid to Washington

History Affords No Other Example of Tributes Paid to Worth.

George Washington has achieved immortality. From time to time appear writings aiming to add to the general body of knowledge concerning him. Most of these are hypercritical, some would appear destructive, all fall flat. The "True George Washington" has been exalted to a plane upon which he defies injury. He not only is "first" in the hearts of his countrymen, he is enshrined there.

Historians affect solicitude because myth and tradition have overlaid and concealed the real Washington. The people know their Washington as they want to know him. They attribute to him those qualities which they idealize as those of a great and good man.

Given World's Homage

Perhaps to no other character in history is like homage given. A few other people who have struggled for freedom have their liberators, but Washington in the minds of the American people is more than a liberator. The Revolutionary war might have been won without the leadership of Washington, but it is not at all certain that, without the steadying influence of Washington, the ship of state could have been launched safely.

In the lengthy annals of England there is no name held in reverence by the English as the name of Washington is revered by Americans. The French people and the Germans have no such hero. But all these, holding in common a high regard for freedom and the rights of man, have claimed a share in Washington.

Unequaled Tribute

England has been glad to proclaim Washington an Englishman. When the news of the death of Washington was taken across the Atlantic, Europe mourned, and in an official report, Talleyrand, French minister of foreign affairs, said:

"His own country now honors his memory with funeral ceremonies, having lost a citizen whose public actions and unassuming grandeur in private life were a living example of courage, wisdom and unselfishness; and France which from the dawn of the American Revolution hailed with hope a nation, hitherto unknown, that was discarding the vices of Europe, which foresaw all the glory that this nation would bestow on humanity, and the enlightenment of governments that would ensue from the novel character of the social institutions, and the new type of heroism of which Washington and Americans were models for the world at large—France, I repeat, should depart from established usages and do honor to one whose fame is beyond comparison with that of others."

In America long ago this Washington became incomparable. We have had other great men, but we think of none of them as of Washington. Jefferson's place in history is assured. He was a patriot, a scholar, a true friend of democracy, but he is chiefly honored as the founder of a party. Alexander Hamilton was the great Federalist. But Washington, who lived at the same time with them and benefited by their counsels, was above party. Nobody now thinks of Washington as a party man. No man would think of saying, "Washington was the founder or the leader of my party," but every citizen has the right to thrill at the thought, "Washington was the father of my country."

Latest Fad Is That of Pajamas Made Out of Gay Gingham

Have you heard the latest? This pajamas shown here is a novelty are making pajama ensembles out of gingham. Here's a picture of the very newest. Aren't they just the cleverest ever?

No doubt, every woman who does her own sewing will be wanting to make one or more sets "just like" the pajamas in this picture. Garments as attractive and as practical, not to mention their cunning novelty, as these, really should be included in every home-sewing program this spring. To copy this pajama suit, which, by the way, is called "poinsettia," you will need about three yards of the plain and five yards of the check gingham. At say, thirty cents a yard (lovely ginghams are to be had at that price this year) the entire expense would not be more than two dollars and fifty cents, thread included. Here's one time when it is a pleasure to "stop and think of the cost."

Of course other wash fabrics could be used, but gingham is so absolutely reliable, does not fade, has such dependable wearing qualities, and always comes from the tub looking "just like new."

The gingham which fashions the in black and white check in something of a tweed design trimmed with red gingham in a one-tone effect. The sleeveless pajama shirt is also of the red gingham. If you cannot draft and cut your own pattern, secure a regulation pajama and coolie coat pattern, and plan the cutting of your material according. You can easily draw a pattern for the poinsettias which are appliqued on the checked gingham, or you can substitute another preferred flower.

Here's more good news, which should prove inspirational to the woman who does her own sewing—comes from Paris the announcement that certain of the leading couturiers there are sponsoring frocks of gingham. When it is taken into consideration that ginghams of lutrinde value and wonderful up-to-the-minute colorings can be purchased for twenty-two cents more or less, and that the highest price for the most exquisite is around fifty cents a yard, women who make their own clothes have cause for rejoicing that the style element has entered so completely into the realm of washable weaves.

V. GENERAL AIM OF SCHOOL CAFETERIA

To serve food almost at cost is the aim of all school administrators. To have the proper kind of food and to have properly prepared food for the promotion of good health is their educational aim. The phenomenal development of the school cafeteria indicates that such service fills a real need. The public is being convinced of the value of it, and of the fact that the responsibility for conducting it properly belongs to the school authorities where specialized service can be obtained for operations on a sound business and educational basis. There is no doubt that the school lunch movement which began two centuries ago, and has, within the last thirty years, received such national recognition, will, in the future, gain such momentum that it will stand in the forefront with educational advancement of both Europe and America.

Donald's Inheritance

Just as the change was being made—the act of transferring their victim from James Clinton's arms to those of his accomplice, Jud Tompkins, Audrey decided to make use of her strategical powers. Her eyes took on a more horrified expression, if possible, and she managed to point with her finger to a direction which would detract their attention from her. James foolishly released his hand that had been placed over her mouth, as the prospect of a wild animal being in the vicinity terrified him.

"A wolfe!" she yelled at the top of her voice, which could easily be heard by Phyllis and Miss Alma Gordon.

James Clinton, whose mind was very dull when he became frightened, fell for the ruse.

"D-did y-you s-see a-a wo-wolfe?" he asked, his faced white and his body shivering.

"Y-yes," Audrey tried to imitate his stuttering.

"Wh-we-where can we g-go?" he asked.

"What the blinkety-blank world is the matter with you?" Jud Tompkins, who now realized Audrey's object in giving such an alarm, cut in. "She's foolin' you. She didn't see a dogone thing."

The terrified expression of James Clinton's face left him immediately, giving place to a disgusted look, which indicated that he was ashamed of the fright he had felt and betrayed. Jud quickly seized Audrey and started to run with her, but Phyllis, who had heard the cry "wolfe!", and thinking her young mistress was in danger of being devoured by a wild animal, quickly grasped the rolling pin, and with what haste she was capable of making, immediately started in the direction of Audrey's cry.

When she came in sight of the girl, she was astonished to see the two men, and she saw instantly that by their conduct, Audrey had more to fear from them than from all the wild animals in the state. Jud, observing the older woman who was pursuing them, broke into a run, and would have soon been out of sight from his pursuer, had he not stumbled on the roots of a tree. Audrey, thus disengaged from his hold on her, ran with lightning speed toward the cabin, James Clinton after her. He had not noticed Phyllis and was so intent upon capturing the young girl that he was within two feet of the older woman before he was aware of her presence.

Phyllis raised her right arm indignantly, and before a second's time had elapsed, the wooden rolling pin had come in sharp contact with the head of James Clinton.

"Now you beat it!" she yelled. "And if ever agin' I see you arter Miss Gordon—well, you'll see; I mean, you'll feel." She pointed significantly to the article in her hand. "I had a hubby once, and my practice on him is doin' me good now. The old man couldn't stand so many bumps, so one night he just naturally lit out."

"Your family history doesn't interest me, old lady," Jud Tompkins said, trying hard to regain an upright posture. "The feller yer talkin' to is half way to town by this time, judgin' by the way he started out. Now, you old woman, git back to the house, and keep yer mouth shut about this business, or I'll get even with you," Jud ordered, now standing on his feet.

"Take that for order' a woman t' keep her mouth shut," Phyllis said, giving him a sample of the blow she had given James Clinton a few minutes before. Not liking the reception he was receiving, the man who had, for some reason, agreed to help James Clinton, directed his steps toward his cabin, where the younger man, while awaiting his partner's arrival, was applying liniment to his badly disfigured head.

"Good enough for you," Jud said, as he entered the cabin. "You let that girl make a fool out of you. Serves you right."

"Don't worry. We'll get her yet; but first I want to tie, bind and gag that woman who gave me the loving tap with that wooden thing, whatever it was. She's dangerous to our success."

"You said it that time," Jud replied. Then he asked. "When is that brother of yours due?"

"Next Tuesday. I hoped to have Audrey in a safe place by that time, but unless we do something before then, I'm afraid we'll get her yet. He'n just the kind she would take a liking to."

Jud, filling his pipe with the strong tobacco he was in the habit of using, sat very quiet for a while, meditating over the situation.

"The best thing I know to do is to waylay the boy before he reaches the cabin. Is he coming up on the train?"

"Yes," James replied. "I suppose Fred Poston will meet him at the depot. The best thing for us to do would be for me to attack Poston before he reaches the station. Then Don won't know what to do when he sees there is no one to meet him. You can be hiding somewhere in the vicinity of the station, and if the coast is clear, manage to talk to him, and offer to escort him to the cabin of his friend. The rest will be easy. Bring him here and tie him up."

It was agreed that these arrangements should be carried out, and both men felt highly elated over their prospects of success, as they had previously decided that Jud Tompkins was to keep Donald in captivity away from Audrey Gordon until the year's time should elapse. Then, there would be little trouble regarding the disposal of Mr. Clinton's property, as the odd terms of his will had never been made known to the public. The witnesses had been selected by John T. Burton, Mr. Clinton's attorney, and nothing was to be feared from them.

CHAPTER VIII

The following Tuesday morning found Audrey up early, preparing breakfast for herself and companions, and, considering her inexperience with this particular line of work, she did quite well.

"It's great to be a lady," Phyllis Parsons said, as she arose from the table, and, without offering to assist with the usual work of washing dishes and general cleaning, walked leisurely toward the front porch, where she opened a book containing the latest love story, and pretending to be reading it, as that was the pose she was expected to assume when Donald Clinton arrived that afternoon.

All of the time that morning was occupied making preparations for the new arrival. Audrey, dressed in one of her gingham frocks looked forward with pleasure to the days which would follow. At noon, they partook of a hasty repast as Donald Clinton was expected to arrive on the two o'clock train. Fred examined his tires, then opened the door of the sedan, and started the motor. He was soon out of sight from the cabin, on the dusty road that led from the mountains to the station. The car had just rounded a turn in the road when he saw a man wearing overalls and a large straw hat standing at the side of the road apparently waiting for someone. When the man saw Fred's car, he threw up his right hand, as a signal for the young man to stop.

Fred immediately recognized the man as the farmer at whose house he had stopped for water a few days before.

"Good afternoon," he said, pleasantly. "Want a lift?"

"No, indeedy. 'D rather walk. Just overheerd a little talk between that Jud Tompkins that we was talkin' 'bout t'other day, and the city feller that come here the same day as you. They expect to waylay you 'fore you can reach the depot, and are a goin' t' trap the feller yer expectin' from town into goin' t' their cabin."

Fred was puzzled. Were the men of whom the farmer was speaking the same ones who had attempted to carry Audrey away. He had left a revolver with the girl, this time, in order to avoid a recurrence of the thing which had happened the last time she was left alone with the two women. But why were these mysterious men their enemies? Why did their plans include both Audrey Gordon and Donald Clinton? Fred, from the time his chum had told him about the terms of Mr. Clinton's will, had suspected James Clinton of being the originator of the idea.

"I must be at the station to meet Don," he said. "How do they expect to stop me?"

"They had planned to lay a long stick of wood, full of nails, across the road, and cover it with dirt. They figgered you'd have trouble with yer rubber wheels, I reckon, and would haf ter git out t' fix 'em. Then they could easily jump on you."

"I must hurry.' It is one forty-five, now. Only fifteen minutes before train time!"

"Don't worry 'bout that. That train never was known to be on time. If you'll turn yer car 'round, and go back to the next road to the right, and foller it, always turning to the right when you come to crossroads, you'll get to the station all right. I'd like to be there, myself, t' help out in case ye meet anybody that ain't as friendly as you'd like to have 'em, but old Fanny's too slow, and I won't ride in that thing of yours."

"Thanks, very much, for your trouble. You have done me a great service. See you later."

With much difficulty, Fred succeeded in turning the car around in the narrow road. Then he followed the route described by the kind-hearted farmer, and soon stopped beside the shabby little station. It was ten minutes past two o'clock, but the train had not yet arrived. The waiting became tiresome, and Fred, with plenty of time in which to ponder over the unpleasant situation of having unscrupulous enemies in the vicinity, waiting for an opportunity to carry out certain plans they had made, was not in an enviable frame of mind.

"Wish I had my revolver," he murmured. "I'd feel safer. But if there are only two of them, we need not worry, as Donald is capable of using his fists when the occasion requires it."

He glanced up the track again, and this time, saw a cloud of smoke in the distance. Then, shortly after, the locomotive came into view, and soon it had stopped in front of the station. The only passenger to alight was Donald Clinton, who, by this time, was beginning to feel that he was doing a foolish thing to travel so far to meet a girl who lived so close to his home town. But he resolved to finish what he had started, and managed to be in a happy mood when he greeted Fred, who led the way to his machine.

Before they started on the return trip, Fred gave his chum a brief account of the attempt made to prevent him from reaching the station.

"One of them must be hiding around here somewhere, as it is evident that you were to be prevented from reaching my cabin safely. He probably decided to see for certain whether or not you arrived on that train. If my idea is correct, I wonder what he thought when he saw that I had reached the depot safely. I'm going to look around," he announced. "Wait for me here, please, Don."

"Let me go along."

"Nothing doing. They might steal my car. Just sit there and keep your fist ready, in case of an emergency, you know."

After a search, which proved futile, Fred and Donald began their return trip to the cabin, going by the way the farmer had indicated to Fred. It was almost meal time when they reached the cabin. Fred's fun-loving spirit, by this time, had routed his fears of the unseen enemies lurking somewhere in the neighborhood. Donald was wondering what kind of a girl Audrey Gordon was, and he had some misgivings regarding her, as Fred had not been flattering in his description of the young lady. When the car stopped in front of the cabin, Donald noticed the woman seated on the front porch, evidently interested in the printed pages before her, and supposed she was the aunt of Miss Audrey Gordon.

"Audrey," the unproportioned figure, advancing toward the newcomer, affected a welcoming smile.

"Glad to have you with us, Mr. Clinton. I am sure we shall enjoy the time spent in one another's company."

She had practiced the speech for days, and for once, avoided frequent mistakes in English, and many mispronounced words. It is needless to say that Donald was provoked. To think he had come this far to meet a woman who was at least fifteen years older than himself, and so extremely unattractive in appearance.

"Holy smoke!" he exclaimed later in an aside to Fred. "And I am expected to marry that! Well, one consolation is that I will have no competition. I wouldn't even consider the proposition, but that brother of mine has been so overbearing to me lately, and I am determined to outwit him. Wonder where he is tonight."

Although Donald was not aware of it, James Clinton was not many miles distant. Disgusted and infuriated at this second miscarrying of their plans, he and his companion were becoming desperate. Unable, at this time, to make another move, they decided to keep quiet for a week or more, so that the objects of their scheming would think they had left the neighborhood.

CHAPTER IX

"Fred!" the voice of Esther Bernswick called from the door of the cabin on the morning of the tenth day of their sojourn in the mountains, to the young man whose general appearance, at that particular moment, indicated that he had been tampering with the mechanism of his car.

"What do you want?" he questioned.

"I wonder if you could take me to the village this morning. I want to do some shopping."

Fred's face wore a doubtful expression.

"I am afraid it is impossible to go in the car," he said regretfully. "Someone paid us a visit during the night, and drained my gasoline tank. The spark plugs also are missing. I'd like to know who is to blame for this," he muttered in a low tone.

"The same people who tried to abduct Audrey and who attempted to prevent you from meeting Don that day, I suppose."

"That is quite likely, but I wish I knew what is back of all this mystery."

"Someone evidently wishes to prevent us from leaving this locality. They have probably made certain plans which would be thwarted if we were to go elsewhere."

Fred did not reply, but he looked thoughtful. Finally he said.

"Your logic sounds good, Es, but there is also another way to view the situation. We are within walking distance of the village, as it is only five miles from here. They must know that either Donald or myself would walk to town for the necessary supplies. They have, in all probability, figured that they could attack us easier on foot than if we were travelling in the car."

"Why can't you and I saunter off leisurely this afternon in a direction leading us away from the village? Then we can change our course and reach an automobile supply station sometime before evening."

"That isn't a bad idea, but I don't believe you should be with me. It may be dangerous, you know."

"I am not afraid. Please take me along. It is getting rather monotonous to me to be unoccupied all of the time, any way."

After a little more persuasion on Esther's part, it was decided that the plan be carried out. As the sun was high in the heavens, and Fred's watch indicated that it was eleven o'clock, the two young people walked around the cabin, entering the kitchen by the rear door. Audrey had begun preparations for the mid-day meal, and was being assisted by a person who was none other than Donald Clinton, himself.

"What's this, Don?" Fred said, in an affectedly surprised and displeased tone of voice. "What would Miss Gordon say? Here she comes now. You had better keep away from the cook," he said in a low tone, as he half dragged his friend into another room.

"Why do I have to sit around trying to make love to a middle-aged unattractive woman while other people enjoy themselves," Donald complained.

"To keep James Clinton from receiving an inheritance which he has no moral right to receive," Fred said, seriously. "I firmly believe that he influenced your father to make such a request, probably by misrepresenting your character to him."

"You may be right, but he won't get ahead of me. I'll marry that old lady, give her a portion of that money, and use my share of it, if necessary, to obtain a divorce, just to keep that boy from being benefited by the little scheme he originated."

"Atta boy! Of course, Miss Gordon doesn't expect the marriage to be permanent. I have tried to make it easier for you by outlining the facts to her, myself. It will be purely a business marriage. In the meantime, don't flirt with the little girl in the kitchen, Aud—er—I mean Phyllis Parsons."

Fortunately, Donald did not notice the blunder his friend came near to making, as his thoughts were on the serious side of the proposition.

"Tonight, I'll ask Audrey Gordon to marry me," he muttered, "and give my dear brother, Jimmie, a little surprise in a few weeks. In the meantime, while the old lady, who is to become my loving bride, takes her afternoon nap, I'll enjoy myself becoming acquainted with your cook," he added, frankly.

"All right, but go slow," Fred warned.

After they had eaten their noon meal, Fred and Esther set out upon their roundabout walk to the village. Taking a path that lead directly south, they walked slowly until they were quite a distance from the cabin. Then, they quickened their pace, and soon came to a cross-path, where they turned. Intending to make a wide circle of the cabin, thereby entering the village from a different direction than their enemies would suspect.

"Getting tired?" Fred asked, after they had walked quite some distance. "Here, take hold of my arm."

Esther was not slow to accept the invitation, and they followed the irregular footpath, which continually branched off into two or more paths leading in different directions, which made it hard to decide which would be the advisable way to go; and it is really hard to say whether these two people gave as much attention to the direction in which they were going as they gave to one another. On and on they wandered, entirely forgetful of the fact that the sun never stops for those who are too much occupied with other things to notice the flight of time.

But even those who may be near to the point of falling in love, can sufficiently waken from their preoccupied state of mind to notice that they have somewhere taken the wrong path. It was Esther who discovered their mistake.

"Oh Fred!" she said. "I'll wonder what time it is. We should be nearing the village by this time, surely; but it seems that we have been walking in a circle."

She pointed to a spot nearby where lay the remains of a partly burned building, probably a woodsman's hut.

"We passed this spot two hours ago," she said. "Don't you remember?"

"You're right," Fred admitted, dejectedly. "I'm so sorry, because of you. Aren't you tired?"

"Just a little," Esther admitted. "But I can stand it. Please do not worry about me," she said, making an effort to speak cheerfully. "After all, we may be near our own cabin."

"This section of the woods is too dense to be in the neighborhood of my hut. We will have to do something to ascertain our position," he said. Then he handed his companion the gun he was carrying as a protection from wild animals.

"I am going to climb this tree to see if I can get a view of the surrounding country. Be right down," he said, as he swung himself onto the lowest limb of a large elm tree, in the same tone of voice he would have used had he been entering an elevator in a city office building. His complete mastery of the situation, and evident confidence in his ability to release them from their predicament, gave Esther a feeling of hope, which routed all fears from her mind. She seated herself on a tree stump to rest her tired body, and waited for Fred to descend to the ground.

After a wait of ten minutes, Fred jumped lightly to the ground from the lowest limb.

"We aren't within ten miles of our cabin," he informed her. "But I could see a log hut about a half-mile north of here, and I know someone is living there, as I could see smoke coming from the chimney."

"How do you know that the direction is north?" Esther asked. "It is beginning to grow dark, isn't it?"

"It appears to be, down here, but the sun has not yet crossed the western horizon."

Forgetting that an object which appears to be a quarter of a mile away from the top of a tall tree, can easily be two or three miles, Fred and Esther again resumed their journey—on and on; and still no sign of shelter.

"I am going to climb this tree to get my bearings again," Fred said, after they had walked what seemed to be two miles. While her companion dragged his tired limbs from one branch to another, Esther waited, in suspense, as the increased darkness and denseness of the forest made her feel loath to permit Fred to release his hold of her arm. After what seemed an hour or more of anxious waiting, she heard the branches moving overhead, and knew that Fred was making his descent from the tree top. When the girl first caught sight of his form emerging from the branches of the tree, she made a discovery, the joy of which made her feel fully repaid for all the physical discomfort she was enduring or would be compelled to endure before she reached the shelter of the cabin, where her friends were probably by this time becoming anxious because she and Fred had not arrived.

"We are almost there," Fred said. "I hope we find the owners to be accommodating people, as you must be very tired. Do you wish you had stayed with Audrey?"

"Can't say that I do," Esther replied frankly.

"You are a good little pal, without a doubt. Lost in the woods, darkness overtaking us, and you aren't sorry."

Esther made no reply, as a sudden idea had just entered her mind.

"Fred," she said. "Before we knock for admittance at the hut we are searching for, it may be advisable to learn who is living there. The people who have been disturbing us must be living somewhere in this vicinity."

"By Jove, Es, you may be right. We will have to be very careful," Fred said.

They walked along in silence, as soon as they came within sight of the dim light showing from the cabin window, being careful to step cautiously so that no sound could warn those dwelling in the hut of their approach. Although it was a cool evening, the window on the side of the cabin was open, and it was easy for Fred and Esther to hear the conversation taking place inside. Fred, cautiously glancing through the windows at the occupants, saw four men seated at a table playing cards, and evidently, judging from the number of bottles on the table, feeling secure in the knowledge that prohibition officers did not frequent that part of the country.

One had the appearance and manner of a typical backwoodsman, who wore a pair of overalls, badly in need of mending. Opposite him, sat a man who looked as though he could pose as a gentleman is the occasion required. His clothes were of the best quality. His facial expression though showing many marks of dissipation, was by some people, considered rather handsome. His speech, when not interrupted by a valley of oaths and curses was faultless. The third was a young man of perhaps twenty-six, who seemed to be in very high spirits, referred to as "Jim" by his companions. The other looked like a product of the slums, all traces of pride and good character being absent from his expression.

GRADUATE AT 80 TO FINISH

Joe College Has No Desire to Take All of the Courses of Study Offered at O. S. U.

Ambition may be good in some cases but the person who has enough ambition to take all the courses offered at Ohio State university would be good for nothing else says Joe College.

Last week Joe figured out that he would be eighty years old if he attempted to apply for his diplomas after taking all the courses at O. S. U. There are approximately 3707 hours of work offered and figuring that a student would take 20 hours of work each quarter he would be in school for 62 years. If he had started at the age of 18 he would finish at 80. Another interesting sidelight that Joe drew was that if he had a class on the fourth floor of University hall each day of the time he was in school he would have climbed 1,116,000 steps or to the top of a building 2000 times as high as the A. I. U. building.

Excitement! That's what Joe and Josephine want but it seems to be lacking at State during this winter quarter. Possibly it has been too cold to get into the whirl of anything other than social events. Last week the president of the student body at the University of Washington was ducked in the lake and left with a shaved head because some of the students didn't like some of his ideas. The methods of producing excitement aren't so well thought of but at least they have a better record than State during the year so far because there have not yet been any duckings in Mirror lake other than the girl who lost her balance when a passer-by tapped her lightly on the shoulder.

Relief from all sections of the state seems to be coming in to the miners who are striking in the Ohio and Pennsylvania coal fields. An organization with the relief idea in mind was formed at the university last week. They will raise money and clothes to aid the children of the mines in southern Ohio.

A well-known economist and professor visitied the campus the other day and told of his recent trip to Russia. In that country he says the schools are offering every phase of business that anyone knows of. They have excellent courses in banking, accounting and economics. They are patterning their schools after the American colleges. One whiskered old man of much authority there stated that the commerce college of Ohio State university was what he considered the best in this country.

The six so-called representative women of the university were chosen last week for a place in the Makio, year book. Weight, heighth, scholarship and activities were the basis for the selection, the judges announced. Some of the girls are perplexed as to whether to start reducing or drink a few more milk shakes each day.

The big social event of the week was the Inter-Fraternity Council Ball of Hearts, a formal affair held on Friday evening. Jo and Josephine were both fortunate in a sense of the word. Josephine was lucky in getting a bid from the boy friend and so she gave the last of her allowance to Joe in order that he too might take his "campus queen."

A bridge, which will be one of the highest in the world, is to be erected over the Grand Canyon of the Colorado at the mouth of the Paria River, not far from the Utah line. At this point the canyon is nearly 600 feet wide and 400 feet deep. For a distance of over 700 miles of continuous canyon a barrier across the State of Arizona, the river has been spanned merely by a slender suspension bridge. The State of Arizona and oil-royalty funds of the Navaho Indian Reservation have furnished the money for the construction of the new bridge.

The first railway to be built in Iceland will be begun before May 1, 1929, and must be completed by July, 1933. If these terms are not met, the construction company forfeits all work to the government without any compensation. The railway will run a distance of 80 kilometers and cost approximately $500,000.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

A "PINK TEA"

It is usually in masculine amusement at this form of entertainment that we hear the expression "pink tea." The term carries with it the implication of froth and superficiality in the essentially feminine institution that we call the "tea."

The origin of the phrase is attributed by Mrs. John King Van Rensselaer, one of the leading social arbiters of New York, to a newspaper reporter who soined the expression in her own drawing room. As she chronicled the story:

"He came to my house for a story when I was giving a reception for my sons—having no daughters to bring up I did not see why my sons should not be properly introduced. The reporter entered my dining room, saw the pink candle shades to match the flowers, noticed the frosting of the same color on the cakes and exclaimed, 'I see you are giving a pink tea.' There was an article in next morning's paper about my pink tea."
